Ayer's Hair Vigor,

FOR RESTORING GRAY HAIR TO ITS NATURAL VITALITY AND COLOR.

IT is a most agreeable dressing, which is at once harmless and effectual, for preserving the hair. It restores, with the gloss and freshness of youth, faded or gray, light, and red hair, to a rich brown, or deep black, as may be desired. By its use thin hair is thickened, and baldness often though not always cured. It checks falling of the hair immediately, and causes a new growth in all cases where the glands are not decayed; while to brashy, weak, or otherwise diseased hair, it imparts vitality and strength, and renders it pliable.

The VIGOR cleanses the scalp, cures and prevents the formation of dandruff; and, by its cooling, stimulating, and soothing properties, it heals most if not all of the humors and diseases peculiar to the scalp, keeping it cool, clean, and soft, under which conditions diseases of the scalp and hair are impossible.

As a Dressing for Ladies' Hair

The VIGOR is incomparable. It is colorless, contains neither oil nor dye, and will not soil white cambric. It imparts an agreeable and lasting perfume, and as an article for the toilet it is economical and unsurpassed in its excellence.

Prepared by Dr. J. C. Ayer & Co., Practical and Analytical Chemists, Lowell, Mass.

SOLD BY ALL DRUGGISTS EVERYWHERE.

TINKERING A "RELIC."

Detroit Free Press.

Three or four months ago, when a Detroiter returned from a long European tour, he brought with him, among others relics, a clock purchased at a pawn shop in Paris and believed to be about four hundred years old. The article was not punchased for its 'time,' as it had not ticked a tick for thirty pears, but the case was of course workmanship, and the whole a relic of considerably value. It has beenon exhibiton in the owner's office on Larned street for the last two months, and has excited much wonderment and curosity. The other day, while the owner was temporally absent from his room, a travelling clock tinker made the tour of the building. Seeing the room open and the old clock off duty, he walked in with the remark:—

'Man would say no if he was here, but I'll have the old machine ticking before he gets back, and if he dosen't want to come down with fifty cents I'll take a quarter. I've passed the age when I can afford to be mean with anybody.'

The clock was yanked down from its brackets, thrown on its back on the desk, and in thirty seconds a screwdriver had seperated it into half a dozen pieces.

'Lots o'rust and dust and durt, but I can have her ticking away like a streak of lightning in less than—'

At a moment the owner stood at the door. It took him adout twenty seconds to comperhended what was occurring, and during this interval the tinker coolly observed:

'Didn't find you in, but its all the same, I presume. I'm always willing to fix a clock for a gentleman and leave the question of pay to him.'

'Hold! you villian!' shouted the gentleman as soon as he could get his breath. 'Great heavens! but what have you done?'

'Took your dust-box to pieces, oilad up several of the wheels, straightened out about a dozen kinks, and in ten minutes more I'll have it ticking away as cheerfully as a bull's eyewatch at a husking-bee.'

'Stop! stop! I command you to stop!

'Shouldn't a bit wonder, and I don't delieve it has ticked twice since the battle of Waterloo.'

'It was a relic—I bought it in Paris—I paid $76 for it as a sacred relic.'

'Paid to much—altogether too much but that's a side issue. Shall I go ahead to fix her up to run?'

'No! no!'

'Won't charge you but fifty cents.'

'No! no!'

'Might perhaps do it for a quarter.'

'I tell you no! How dare you come in here and lay hands on my clock during my absence? I'll have you arrested!'

"Don't! I'll fix it for nothing if you won't!'

The best thing the owner of the clock could do was to ask the tinker to put the parts together as they were at first. That was accomplished in five minutes time, and as the tinker packed up his tools he humbly remarked:—

'I han't made a cent out of this job, and hove lost half an hour's time, but yet there's nothing mean about me. Gimme seventy-five cents and I'll make that clock look to be two thoussand years old in two jerks of a lamb' tail!'

ONE VACCINATION TOO MANY.

Bright and early yesterday morning a middle-aged man, of anxious look and and much corporosity, called at the City Hall and went for the Chief of Police with:—

'Haf we some shmallbox in Detroit?'

'I believe we have a sporadic case or two,' was the reply.

'Und doze somebody haf to get waccinated to keep him away?'

'Every citizen should protect himself.'

'How many dimes was I get waccinated to keep dot shmallbox out of mein house und saloon?'

'Oh, I guess once will do.'

'Vonce? great shiminy! no more ash dot? Shust wate a minute!'

He jerked off his coat and pushed up his shirt sleeves and pointed to four spots on his left arm and five on his right, and said:—

'Four und five makes nine dimes dot I vhas waccinated in four days?'

'How is that?'

'How ish dot? Dot's what I likes myself to know? I vahs shusht reading about dat shmall-box do odder dav in der Sherman papers, when two men vhalks in mine saloon und says:—Sharley, dot shmall-box is all over down, und you must be waccinated, or der Gommon Gouncil vhill close you oop! So I was waccinated for two shillings und swei class beer.'

'Yes?'

'It vhas shust two hours more as a man coms in und say he vhas sant to waccinate me on der odder arm, und I pays him two shillings and class of beer.'

'Yes?'

Before night a man mit spectacles comes in und says he was sent by der Healthy Poard to see oof I vhas waccinated. I show him two blaces, but he shakes his headt und says:—'Dot waccination am too high oop, und you vhill get der shmall-pox in der hands. Den he makes dot blace here, und I gif him twenty five cents und class beer.'

'Yes?'

'Vhell, in der course of four days six more men comes aroundt to waccinate me by order of der, Mayor, der Gufernor, der Bresident, der Poard of Bublic Vorks, and I doan, know vhat else, und efery time I bays two shillings und class beer. Vhen I vhas waccinated nine times I begins to pelieve I vas a greenhorn, und vhen der tenth man comes aroundt I hit him on der head mit a pottle und vhalks oafer to see you about it. Vhas it all right?'

'I guess the boys were guying you.'

'Vhat is dot?'

'Why, you haven't really been vaccinated at all.'

'N-o!'

'No, and you'd better be vaccinated again.'

'Waccinated again! Waccinated den dimes! Nefer! Pefer I vhas waccinated den dimes I catches der shmall-pox und goes to ped mit him all summer! Dot's some close pins for I sen!'

A MAN WITH A RUBBER JAW.

A stranger arrived in St. Catharines on Tuesday last on a prospecting tour. He seemed to make his head quarters anywhere, for the time being, where ardent spirits were sold. He informed several bar room longers confidentially, that he just came from Hamilton, where he dad concluded an engagement with the Scott Act people as a frightful example. His engagement, had not been a brilliant success, in the opinion of the Scott Act people, for seeing that they had given him the grand bounce as a dead beat, though he was prepared to prove that he was no dead beat at all. He says he was the inventor of an anti-tippling machine, by means of which a man might take a night out with the boys, and yet go home perfectly sober. He claimed by means of this machine to be able to make his fortune, if he could only succeed in closing up the rum shop directly under his own nose, and stick to his machine.

"How is it you didn't succeed with the Scott Act people in Hamilton?"

"Well," he replied, "they wanted me to do to much chin music and to clothe myself in rags and go round as a frightful example at their meetings. I got around all right three or four times, but on the last occasion I got full and I kicked up a circus and then they Chisholmed me."

"Well, that is not to be woundered at when you didn't fulfill your engagement."

"Yes, but as I said before its all along of the rum shop right under my nose. I tell you, friend, its all very fine to talk about putting the bottle to your neighbors month, but I've not got that far yet. I have just stuck it under my own nose and ther it remains."

"I dare say. but what about your wonderful anti-tippling machine. Why didn't you sell that to the Scott Act people of Hamilton?"

"Bless your heart they wouldnt have it! Further than that they said I was worse than King Dodds. But I'll just bet you one dollar I can take in all the drinks you'll pay for. and walk out of this bar room sober as a judge."

The bet was made. The man first drank two schooners of lager, two drinks of the worst whiskey in the place, known as blue lightning. He next got away with about half a pint of rum, a glass of cider, and some stale porter. This seeming to have no effect he got his dollar, and was then asked how he managed it.

The fellow produce from under his vest a rubber bag which was so fixed to his lower jaw as to produce a sort of double month. Into this receptacle he poured all the fluid he had drank and emptied it outside the door.

The bar-tender immediately seized a club and told the man with the rubber jaw to get out as he wanted no such critter around spoling good liquor.

A HUNTING ADVENTURE.

FROM THE PACIFIC COAST.

A short time ago Hon. E. C. Tully, of Bitterwater, had occassion to visit the Laguna ranch, a few miles from this place, across the mountain. He went on foot, taking his gun with him, thinking he might see a wildcat, and and also desiring protect himself from the deer which at times were nemerous in the mountains. Sure enough he saw three deer, and as they looked fierce he fired at one. It bounded towards a clump of bushes although it had been hit. Mr. Tully went to see any trace of blood could be found, when he suddenly heard a sound from the bushes that he supposed emanated from a she bear with cubs. "Never," said Mr. Tully, "was I so badly frightened. I looked for a tree, but there was none that I could climb." His gun was a muzzle loading rifle, and he knew that it requires a centre shot to kill a bear. But there was no alternative; he had to hand his ground. These thoughts of course passed through his mind in an instant. We entertained the opinion that Mr. Tulley would have vamoosed but he was frozen to the spot by terror. In less time than it takes to tell it, the climax was reached by the deer bounding out of the thicket, and falling a few yards from Mr. Tully at the edge of the brush. The surprise was so great and gratifying that he said aloud: "Well I got you after all," but had no sooner said it than he noticed a huge Calaforina lion wound around the deer. He supposed the deer was mortally wounded, and waited for a convenient opportunity when he shot the lion in the head. The deer was no sooner released from the grip of his capter than he sprang to his feet and ran as only a frightened deer can, much to the discomfort of the gentleman who had now recovered from his fright, and hated to see his venison taking such a hasty and unceremonious depature. He got the lion, though. It was a huge fellow, measuring seven feet from tip to tip.

A REAL NECESSITY.—No house should be without a bottle of HAGYARD'S YELLOW OIL, in case of accident. There is no preparation offered to suffering humanity that has made so many permanent cures, or relieved so much pain and misery. It is called by some the Good Samaritan, by others the Cure-all and by the afflicted an Angel of Mercy.

BURGLAR AND BULLDOG.

THE FLIGHT OF A MOONLIGHT MECHANIC ARRESTED BY A DOG—THE FUGITIVE [illegible] OF THE GAME.

WAKEFIELD, Mass., May 4.—Last night a police officer heard a noise in the office G. W. Aborn, coal dealer, which led him to suspect that a burglar or burglars had effected an entrance, and was at work within. The proprietor and the neighbours were aroused, and the place surrounded. While one of the men went to get a bulldog the burglar made a dash from the front door. Mr. Eaton, a neighbour, opened fire, calling upon him to surrender, but the burglar continued his flight over the railroad and across the fields. The dog by this time was on his track, and bothered the burglar so that officer Malony came up with the chase. A lively scrimmage ensued, the officer receiving an ugly blow across the mouth and another across the side of the head with the desperado's revolver, which he had fired once and snapped the second time, the burglar getting his deserts in the form of a beauty mark across the forehead from the officers billy. In the midst of the melee a young man came up and rendered such material aid to the officer that the hard-pressed refugee exclaimed, "I give up," and the darbies were snapped on. The burglar proved to be a negro unknown in the neighbourhood, and seemingly a desperate character.

TO PUBLIC SPEAKERS.

Public speakers and singers who would possess a clear voice, freedom from hoarseness and sore throat should usa Hagyard's Pectoral balsam, a safe, pleasant and certain healer for the throat and lungs; it speedily breaks up a cold and cures all pulmonary complaints, that so often lead to incurable Consumption.

A SMALL BLACK HEROINE.

My washerwoman told me of a little black herione, who ought to be immortalized. She is only four years old and was left alone with the baby a year old while the mother went out for a day's work. while the good old auntie was over soapsuds she heard some boys shouting, "The Potomac is out of its banks," She started bareheaded towards her dwelling, saw the river whirling round it five or six feet deep. The poor old woman was frantic, and a member of the life-savidg crew took her in and ferried her to the door. There was not a sound the poor little ones must have drowned. The mother's cries brought a kinky head to the window "Here we is, mammy; I fetched siss up in loft, cause there is water down dar'." Then the baby was lifted up by the small arms to see mammy, and in a few minutes both the little ones were enjoying their first ride in a boat.—Concinnatti Commercial.

"Where have you been for the week back?" enquired a man of his neighbor; "I have not a weak back," retorted he, "you misunderstand me," remarked his friend; "but if you ever get a weak back try Burdock Blood Bitters. It cures all debility arising from disordered Kidneys, Liver or Blood, and is the best purifying Tonic in the world. All medicine dealers supply Sample Bottles at 10 Cents, Regular Size$1. 00.

"NE PLUS ULSTER."

A GARMENT THAT PROMISES TO BECOME A SUMMER FAVORITE WITH ALL.
(FROM THE DETROIT FREE PRESS.)

The ulster for the coming summer speak for itself on sight. It can be worn with tails or without. The tails can be lowered by means of hinges to drag on the walk, or they can be raised or slewed around to form extra pockets for holding four clean shirts apiece. The collor is fitted with a rubbber tube to hold any sort of drink fitted for the occasion. A quart of hard cider can be carried to a Sunday school picnic, and slyly imbibed at the convenience of the wearer without any one being the wiser. All the man has to do is to turn his head to the left, slip an amber mouth piece into his jaws, and slowly get away with his tonic, while he seems to be lost in amazement at the wonder of nature. The ulster is a life preserver, and when blown up will sustain the weight of three school ma'ams and a lecturer from Japan. If occasion requires it can be quickly converted into a water proof tent capable of sheltering a small family. The right hand pocket is sheet-ironed for use as a kettle in which to make tea or boil eggs, and the left hand is a sort of refrigerator in which to store perishable goods. Each sleeve is provided with a secret pocket for the benefit of those who want to get four aces into a poker hand, and a sheath for a bowie knife is stitched into the back in the most secure manner. Folded one way the ulster forms a jib sail, and can be attached to any boat in five minutes. Folded one other way yvon have a stretcher on which to carry off the fat woman who fell from a tree and broke her leg.

It is the ne plus ulster. It contains good look with a right smart of convenience. It hides a hump between the shoulders covers up a stop, and a bow legged man is made to appear as graceful as an antelope. There are seven diffrent spots on which to scratch matches three flaps on which to wipe the nose and a Texas steer may play with the wearer all day and not be able to spoil the set of garments. Send in your orders before the rush begins.

All forms of Nervous Debility so commonly prevalent yield to the vitalizing powers of Burdock Blood Bitters. It is the best regulator of the Liver, Bowels and Kidneys, the most perfect Blood Purifier and permanent Tonic known. Purely vegetable, safe and pleasant to take, and unfailing in its effects as a health restorative. Sample Bottles 10 Cts.

IN THE MIDST OF PERIL.

By the Author of "Hidden Quicksands," "A Relentless Foe," "Maggie O'Conner's Fortunes," &c., &c.

FROM an oversight of the compositor, three or four Chapters of this story were overlooked, therefore our readers will excuse us if we take them back a little.

The young clergyman looked very grave and anxious.

"I see that you must not yield to threats in this matter," he said "but surely Mr. Coghlan, while the animosity of this unlucky affray lasts it would be wiser to leave the place and take your family to Dublin."

"I don't believe we shall be safer there if Daniel O'Rourke is hanged on my evidence," replied Mr. Coghlan. "His relatives would not find it too far off for vengeance. However say nothing of this notice to the ladies; it will only harass them for nothing."

"When do you go?"

"Early in November, and this is the eighteenth of October. I shall leave on the first, and confide my family to your care till I return, Surridge, when I hope to move them to Dublin."

The entrance of Eva interrupted their conversation.

The long period which had followed Captain Rock's first warning without fulfilment of his threats had gradually caused the family to forget the peril which lurked around them. It is true they heard of fearful outrages in other parts of Ireland; but a lull seemed to have fallen on their part of the country. Glorvina and Eva no longer kept to the grounds in their daily walks; but, at Mrs Coghlan's request, joined Teddy and his tutor in their rambles, to the great delight of both the pupil and his preceptor. Captain Leicester often joined them also; and Surridge was relieved on perceiving that much of his attention was bestowed on Eva.

They had not seen quite so much of Tim O'Brien lately. He had been from home "visiting friends," he said. But a day or two before Mr. Coghlan's departure he called and asked to speak to the squire. The interview was rather a long one, and the family noticed that Tim looked very grave after it. That night Mr. Coghlan observed to his wife when they were alone—

"I fear Tim O'Brien is extravagant; he is always in want of money. Though," he added, "I allow his father keeps him too short."

"It's a pity," replied the sagacious little woman, "that poor Tim should not have a profession. An idle lad, energetic and active as he is, is apt to get into trouble. I wonder where he goes on those long visits he makes?"

"I am sure I can't tell you," said Mr. Coghlan. "But he is 'hard up' again as he calls it, and has borrowed a pretty large sum altogether of me at intervals. However I told him to-day that this must be the last loan I make him. It would be unjust to my children to risk more."

Mrs. Coghlan was of the same opinion; she had been uneasy more than once at her husband's good-natured loans to Tim O'Brien.

CHAPTER. VI.

It was the eve of Allhallows. Mr. Coghlan was to leave for Dublin on the next day, but his family attached no sense of danger to his journey, being in ignorance of the Whiteboys last threat. On the contrary, they were in high glee. Captain Leicester and a young brother-officer—a cornet named Quarles—O'Brien, and Lucy Walker, the clergyman's daughter, who had come on a visit to the Priory, were gathered round the drawing room fire with the other members of the family after dinner.

"Do you know what to-night is" asked Glorvina of the tutor. "It is All hallows Eve, and we must try and learn our fortunes."

"Do you believe in such idle superstitions?" he asked.

"Of course! Am I not a true Irish girl? I adhere to the faith of my forefathers in such harmless matters as a point of honour. You will join us?"

"The parson will not think it befitting his cloth," said Tim good-naturedly; "will you Surridge?"

He had been very civil and gracious to James since he had set his arm.

"I se no serious objection," was the reply, as the tutor drew a chair up beside Glorvina.

"First," said the young lady solemnly, "we must burn nuts together, and you shall begin. Here are two; one represents yourself, the other you must name."

"Let it be me," cried little Norah eagerly; "and if I don't pop off, I shall be Mrs. Surridge."

The tutor smiled, and put the nuts side by side, as he was directed, on the bar. Alas, Norah flew off with a bounce, quite befitting the little damsel's character!

"Oh, dear," she exclaimed, "how tiresome! And there are Captain Leicester and Eva—it is Eva, isn't it?—burning so brightly side by side."

There was a laugh; a flush on Captain Leicester's face and a visible blush on Eva's. Then young Quarles volunteered to burn a nut with the child, Miss Lucy Walker's having flown off from his. Glorvina had held two nuts in her fingers for some minutes.

"Glorvina," whispered Tim at her side, "may I not try with you?"

"No; we will not risk a false augury," she replied gravely. "Let me see, whom shall I select?" Then, with a sweet indifferent smile at the clergyman, as if the idea of his being a lover were fantastic nonsense—"Mr. Surridge, you shall be my chosen nut."

As she spoke, a flood of crimson rushed over his face. For an instant he looked up at her. What did she read in those despairing passionate eyes? Glorvina started and dropped her nuts. It was not possible to mistake that look of hopeless passion. She did not know very well what to do; but it was surely best to appear not to have seen and understood. She [illegible]

[illegible] "Nay," she replied quietly, "Mr. Surridge and I are great friends. [illegible]"

And so in fun [illegible] burned [illegible] side by side [illegible]

[illegible] the room [illegible] hazard [illegible] one filled with water, another filled with earth, another with paper, the fourth [illegible] and was declared to be the destined bride of [illegible] in the earth, and was consequently told that she would marry one who lived by the land; and Glorvina picked out some pieces of paper, which gave her, of course, to one of the learned professions. Captain Leicester and young Quarles complained that the Army had no chance in this divination; but Mrs. Coghlan, who entered into the fun, assured them that the water represented all who served their country.

There was much innocent mirth till the children went off to bed. Mrs. Coghlan had already gone to arrange a little business still unsettled.

"Shall we sow hemp-seed to-night?" asked Tim.

"What is that?" was the Englishman's question.

"Well, you take a pocketful of hemp-seed and sow it around the church, singing, 'Hemp-seed, I sow you—hemp-seed, I sow you; let my love come and mow you.' The phantom of the future husband then appears and reaps the hemp with a sickle; if a lady, she flits by with a scythe."

"By all means let us try it," said the Cornet. "Is the church far off?"

"No; just outside the gates. Let us go! We can wait in the porch and let the hemp-seed sowers go round one by one," said Tim.

"I scarcely like the idea," declared Mrs. Coghlan; "in these times—"

"Oh, mamma," interrupted Eva, who was unusually excited by the fun of the evening, "I don't believe in 'these times'; I believe the Whiteboys are only a dream."

"At any rate," observed Captain Leicester, who also seemed anxious for the excursion, "you will be safe with us; we have swords, and O'Brien can take that tremendous shillelagh of his without which he never stirs."

And so the excursion was settled, in spite of some wild remonstrances from the tutor, who sincerely wished that Mr. Coghlan was here to forbid it. In fact he stole away to that gentleman's study to warn him; but could not find him there, or in his room, and when he returned to the drawing-room he found all the young people gone.

"Mr. Surridge," said Mrs. Coghlan anxiously, "they have all run off like a parcel of silly children. I wish you would be so kind as to go after them and see that no harm comes of their frolic."

The tutor instantly assented to her request, and at once set out after the revellers. It was a clear bright starlight night; the heavens with their myriad stars looked down solemnly on the hushed earth. The only sound he heard as he hurried up the avenue was the whispering of the leaves of the trees which bordered it. He reached the lodge gate as the church clock struck twelve and then he walked even faster towards it; but though he went at his best speed, he found on reaching the porch, in which the young people were huddled, that Lucy Walker and the Cornet had already sowed their hemp-seed without any result.

"I will go next," declared Glorvina, glancing to the spot where Eva and Leicester were chatting in the shadow of the porch, oblivious evidently of why they had come—"Now!"

And, with a merry nod at those she departed. The others remained chatting. Surridge felt a strong anxiety. The moments went by and appeared endless to him; the others talked cheerfully together; Only he and O'Brien stood at the entrance of the porch, listening. At length James said—

"I think I had better go and see where Miss Desmond is."

"I would," exclaimed O'Brien, "if we had not solemnly pledged ourselves not to follow each other for ten minutes or a quarter of an hour, and it is not that time since she left us."

"I am bound by no promise," replied the tutor, and, without another word, he walked quickly in the direction Glorvina had taken.

The church was very large—it had once been a Catholic cathedral—and he had not reached the end of it when he heard a wild cry. He ran forward, and, turning the corner, saw her leaning against a buttress. Was it the starlight that made her face so pale and gave that awful look to her eyes?

A RAILWAY BRIDGE BURNT.

MILTON, May 4.—A smash up occurred here on the Credit Valley railway to-night. While a train was passing through the town a wheel of the caboose broke, which caused the stove to be overturned, setting fire to the car, also to the bridge upon which it stopped. The car and bridge were totally destroyed, also were the rails for about one hundred yards along the track. The conductor was slightly hurt in jumping from the bridge to the ground. The fire occurred at 8 p.m.

TINKERING A RELIC.

Detroit Free Press.

Three or four months ago, when a Detroiter returned from a long European tour, he brought with him, among others relics, a clock purchased at a pawn shop in Paris and believed to be about four hundred years old. The article was not purchased for its 'time,' as it had not ticked a tick for thirty years, but the case was of course workmanship, and the whole a relic of considerably value. It has beenon exhibiton in the owner's office on Larned street for the last two months, and has excited much wonderment and curosity. The other day, while the owner was temporally absent from his room, a travelling clock tinker made the tour of the building. Seeing the room open and the old clock off duty, he walked in with the remark:—

'Man would say no if he was here, but I'll have the old machine ticking before he gets back, and if he dosen't want to come down with fifty cents I'll take a quarter. I've passed the age when I can afford to be mean with anybody.'

The clock was yanked down from its brackets, thrown on its back on the desk, and in thirty seconds a screwdriver had seperated it into half a dozen pieces.

'Lots o'rust and dust and durt, but I can have her ticking away like a streak of lightning in less than—'

At a moment the owner stood at the door. It took him adout twenty seconds to comperhended what was occurring, and during this interval the tinker coolly observed:

'Didn't find you in, but its all the same, I presume. I'm always willing to fix a clock for a gentleman and leave the question of pay to him.'

'Hold! you villian!' shouted the gentleman as soon as he could get his breath. 'Great heavens! but what have you done?'

'Took your dust-box to pieces, oiled up several of the wheels, straightened out about a dozen kinks, and in ten minutes more I'll have it ticking away as cheerfully as a bull's eyewatch at a husking-bee.'

'Stop! stop! I command you to stop!

'Shouldn't a bit wonder, and I don't delieve it has ticked twice since the battle of Waterloo.'

'It was a relic—I bought it in Paris—I paid $76 for it as a sacred relic.'

'Paid to much—altogether too much but that's a side issue. Shall I go ahead to fix her up to run?'

'No! no!'

'Won't charge you but fifty cents.'

'No! no!'

'Might perhaps do it for a quarter.'

'I tell you no! How dare you come in here and lay hands on my clock during my absence? I'll have you arrested!'

"Don't! I'll fix it for nothing if you won't!'

The best thing the owner of the clock could do was to ask the tinker to put the parts together as they were at first. That was accomplished in five minutes time, and as the tinker packed up his tools he humbly remarked:—

'I han't made a cent out of this job, and hove lost half an hour's time, but yet there's nothing mean about me. Gimme seventy-five cents and I'll make that clock look to be two thousand years old in two jerks of a lamb' tail!'

ONE VACCINATION TOO MANY.

Bright and early yesterday morning a middle-aged man, of anxious look and and much corporosity, called at the City Hall and went for the Chief of Police with:—

'Haf we some shmallbox in Detroit?'

'I believe we have a sporadic case or two,' was the reply.

'Und doze somebody haf to get waccinated to keep him away?'

'Every citizen should protect himself.'

'How many dimes was I get waccinated to keep dot shmallbox out of mein house und saloon?'

'Oh, I guess once will do.'

'Vonce? great shiminy! no more ash dot? Shust wate a minute!'

He jerked off his coat and pushed up his shirt sleeves and pointed to four spots on his left arm and five on his right, and said:—

'Four und five makes nine dimes dot I vhas waccinated in four days?'

'How is that?'

'How ish dot? Dot's what I likes myself to know? I vahs shusht reading about dat shmall-box do odder dav in der Sherman papers, when two men vhalks in mine saloon und says: —Sharley, dot shmall-box is all over down, und you must be waccinated, or der Gommon Gouncil vhill close you oop! So I was waccinated for two shillings und swei class beer.'

'Yes?'

'It vhas shust two hours more as a man coms in und say he vhas sent to waccinate me on der odder arm, und I pays him two shillings and class of beer.'

'Yes?'

Before night a man mit spectacles comes in und says he was sent by der Healthy Poard to see oof I vhas waccinated. I show him two blaces, but he shakes his headt und says:—'Dot waccination am too high oop, und you vhill get der shmall-pox in der hands. Den he makes dot blace here, und I gif him twenty five cents und class beer.'

'Yes?'

'Vhell, in der course of four days six more men comes aroundt to waccinate me by order of der, Mayor, der Gufernor, der Bresident, der Poard of Bublic Vorks, and I doan, know vhat else, und efery time I bays two shillings und class beer. Vhas it all right?'

'I guess the boys were guying you.'

'Vhat is dot?'

'Why, you haven't really been vaccinated at all.'

'N-o!'

'No, and you'd better be vaccinated again.'

'Waccinated again! Waccinated den dimes! Nefer! Pefor I vhas waccinated den dimes I catches der shmall-pox und goes to ped mit him all summer! Dot's some close pins like I am!'

A MAN WITH A RUBBER JAW.

A stranger arrived in St. Catharines on Tuesday last on a prospecting tour. He seemed to make his head quarters anywhere, for the time being, where ardent spirits were sold. He informed several bar room longers confidentially, that he just came from Hamilton, where he dad concluded an engagement with the Scott Act people as a frightful example. His engagement, had not been a brilliant success, in the opinion of the Scott Act people, for seeing that they had given him the grand bounce as a dead beat, though he was prepared to prove that he was no dead beat at all. He says he was the inventer of an anti-tippling machine, by means of which a man might take a night out with the boys, and yet go home perfectly sober. He claimed by means of this machine to be able to make his fortune, if he could only succeed in closing up the rum shop directly under his own nose, and stick to his machine.

"How is it you didn't succeed with the Scott Act people in Hamilton?"

"Well," he replied, "they wanted me to do to much chin music and to clothe myself in rags and go round as a frightful example at their meetings. I got around all right three or four times, but on the last occasion I got full and I kicked up a circus and then they Chisholmed me."

"Well, that is not to be woundered at when you didn't fulfill your engagement."

"Yes, but as I said before its all along of the rum shop right under my nose. I tell you, friend, its all very fine to talk about putting the bottle to your neighbors month, but I've not got that far yet. I have just stuck it under my own nose and ther it remains."

"I dare say. but what about your wonderful anti-tippling machine. Why didn't you sell that to the Scott Act people of Hamilton?"

"Bless your heart they wouldnt have it! Further than that they said I was worse than King Dodds. But I'll just bet you one dollar I can take in all the drinks you'll pay for. and walk out of this bar room sober as a judge."

The bet was made. The man first drank two schooners of lager, two drinks of the worst whiskey in the place, known as blue lightning. He next got away with about half a pint of rum, a glass of cider, and some stale porter. This seeming to have no effect he got his dollar, and was then asked how he managed it.

The fellow produce from under his vest a rubber bag which was so fixed to his lower jaw as to produce a sort of double month. Into this receptacle he poured all the fluid he had drank and emptied it outside the door.

The bar-tender immediately seized a club and told the man with the rubber jaw to get out as he wanted no such critter around spoling good liquor.

A HUNTING ADVENTURE.

FROM THE PACIFIC COAST.

A short time ago Hon. E. C. Tully, of Bitterwater, had occassion to visit the Laguna ranch, a few miles from this place, across the mountain. He went on foot, taking his gun with him, thinking he might see a wildcat, and and also desiring protect himself from the deer which at times were nemerous in the mountains. Sure enough he saw three deer, and as they looked fierce he fired at one. It bounded towards a clump of bushes although it had been hit. Mr. Tully went to see any trace of blood could be found, when he suddenly heard a sound from the bushes that he supposed emanated from a she bear with cubs. "Never," said Mr. Tully, "was I so badly frightened. I looked for a tree, but there was none that I could climb." His gun was a muzzle loading rifle, and he knew that it requires a centre shot to kill a bear. But there was no alternative; he had to hand his ground. These thoughts of course passed through his mind in an instant. We entertained the opinion that Mr. Tulley would have vamoosed but he was frozen to the spot by terror. In less time than it takes to tell it, the climax was reached by the deer bounding out of the thicket, and falling a few yards from Mr. Tully at the edge of the brush. The surprise was so great and gratifying that he said aloud: "Well I got you after all," but had no sooner said it than he noticed a huge Calaforina lion wound around the deer. He supposed the deer was mortally wounded, and waited for a convenient opportunity when he shot the lion in the head. The deer was no sooner released from the grip of his capter than he sprang to his feet and ran as only a frightened deer can, much to the discomfort of the gentleman who had now recovered from his fright, and hated to see his venison taking such a hasty and unceremonious depature. He got the lion, though. It was a huge fellow, measuring seven feet from tip to tip.

BURGLAR AND BULLDOG.

THE FLIGHT OF A MOONLIGHT MECHANIC ARRESTED BY A DOG—THE FUGITIVE THROWS UP THE GAME.

WAKEFIELD, Mass., May 4.—Last night a police officer heard a noise in the office G. W. Abern, coal dealer, which led him to suspect that a burglar or burglars had effected an entrance, and was at work within. The proprietor and the neighbours were aroused, and the place surrounded. While one of the men went to get a bulldog the burglar made a dash from the front door. Mr. Eaton, a neighbour, opened fire, calling upon him to surrender, but the burglar continued his flight over the railroad and across the fields. The dog by this time was on his track, and bothered the burglar so that officer Malony came up with the chase. A lively scrimmage ensued, the officer receiving an ugly blow across the mouth and another across the side of the head with the desperado's revolver, which he had fired once and snapped the second time, the burglar getting his deserts in the form of a beauty mark across the forehead from the officers billy. In the midst of the melee a young man came up and rendered such material aid to the officer that the hard-pressed refugee exclaimed, "I give up," and the darbies were snapped on. The burglar proved to be a negro unknown in the neighbourhood, and seemingly a desperate character.

A SMALL BLACK HEROINE.

My washerwoman told me of a little black herione, who ought to be immortalized. She is only four years old and was left alone with the baby a year old while the mother went out for a day's work. while the good old auntie was over soapsuds she heard some boys shouting, "The Potomac is out of its banks," She started bareheaded towards her dwelling, saw the river whirling round it five or six feet deep. The poor old woman was frantic, and a member of the life-savidg crew took her in and ferried her to the door. There was not a sound the poor little ones must have drowned. The mother's cries brought a kinky head to the window "Here we is, mammy; I fetched siss up in loft, cause there is water down dar'." Then the baby was lifted up by the small arms to see mammy, and in a few minutes both the little ones were enjoying their first ride in a boat.—Concinnatti Commercial.

The ulster for the coming summer speak for itself on sight. It can be worn with tails or without. The tails can be lowered by means of hinges to drag on the walk, or they can be raised or slewed around to form extra pockets for holding four clean shirts apiece. The collor is fitted with a rubbber tube to hold any sort of drink fitted for the occasion. A quart of hard cider can be carried to a Sunday school picnic, and slyly imbibed at the convenience of the wearer without any one being the wiser. All the man has to do is to turn his head to the left, slip an amber mouth piece into his jaws, and slowly get away with his tonic, while he seems to be lost in amazement at the wonder of nature. The ulster is a life preserver, and when blown up will sustain the weight of three school ma'ams and a lecturer from Japan. If occasion requires it can be quickly converted into a water proof tent capable of sheltering a small family. The right hand pocket is sheet-ironed for use as a kettle in which to make tea or boil eggs, and the left hand is a sort of refrigerator in which to store perishable goods. Each sleeve is provided with a secret pocket for the benefit of those who want to get four aces into a poker hand, and a sheath for a bowie knife is stitched into the back in the most secure manner. IN THE MIDST OF PERIL.

By the Author of "Hidden Quicksands," "A Relentless Foe," "Maggie O'Conner's Fortunes," &c., &c.

FROM an oversight of the compositor, three or four Chapters of this story were overlooked, therefore our readers will excuse us if we take them back a little.

The young clergyman looked very grave and anxious.

"I see that you must not yield to threats in this matter," he said "but surely Mr. Coghlan, while the animosity of this unlucky affray lasts it would be wiser to leave the place and take your family to Dublin."

"I don't believe we shall be safer there if Daniel O'Rourke is hanged on my evidence," replied Mr. Coghlan. "His relatives would not find it too far off for vengeance. However say nothing of this notice to the ladies; it will only harass them for nothing."

"When do you go?"

"Early in November, and this is the eighteenth of October. I shall leave on the first, and confide my family to your care till I return, Surridge, when I hope to move them to Dublin."

The entrance of Eva interrupted their conversation.

The long period which had followed Captain Rock's first warning without fulfilment of his threats had gradually caused the family to forget the peril which lurked around them. It is true they heard of fearful outrages in other parts of Ireland; but a lull seemed to have fallen on their part of the country. Glorvina and Eva no longer kept to the grounds in their daily walks; but, at Mrs Coghlan's request, joined Teddy and his tutor in their rambles, to the great delight of both the pupil and his preceptor. Captain Leicester often joined them also; and Surridge was relieved on perceiving that much of his attention was bestowed on Eva.

They had not seen quite so much of Tim O'Brien lately. He had been from home "visiting friends," he said. But a day or two before Mr. Coghlan's departure he called and asked to speak to the squire. The interview was rather a long one, and the family noticed that Tim looked very grave after it. That night Mr. Coghlan observed to his wife when they were alone—

"I fear Tim O'Brien is extravagant; he is always in want of money. Though," he added, "I allow his father keeps him too short."

"It's a pity," replied the sagacious little woman, "that poor Tim should not have a profession. An idle lad, energetic and active as he is, is apt to get into trouble. I wonder where he goes on those long visits he makes?"

"I am sure I can't tell you," said Mr. Coghlan. "But he is 'hard up' again as he calls it, and has borrowed a pretty large sum altogether of me at intervals. However I told him to-day that this must be the last loan I make him. It would be unjust to my children to risk more."

Mrs. Coghlan was of the same opinion; she had been uneasy more than once at her husband's good-natured loans to Tim O'Brien.

CHAPTER. VI.

It was the eve of Allhallows. Mr. Coghlan was to leave for Dublin on the next day, but his family attached no sense of danger to his journey, being in ignorance of the Whiteboys last threat. On the contrary, they were in high glee. Captain Leicester and a young brother-officer—a cornet named Quarles—O'Brien, and Lucy Walker, the clergyman's daughter, who had come on a visit to the Priory, were gathered round the drawing room fire with the other members of the family after dinner.

"Do you know what to-night is" asked Glorvina of the tutor. "It is All hallows Eve, and we must try and learn our fortunes."

"Do you believe in such idle superstitions?" he asked.

"Of course! Am I not a true Irish girl? I adhere to the faith of my forefathers in such harmless matters as a point of honour. You will join us?"

"The parson will not think it befitting his cloth," said Tim good-naturedly; "will you Surridge?"

He had been very civil and gracious to James since he had set his arm.

"I se no serious objection," was the reply, as the tutor drew a chair up beside Glorvina.

"First," said the young lady solemnly, "we must burn nuts together, and you shall begin. Here are two; one represents yourself, the other you must name."

"Let it be me," cried little Norah eagerly; "and if I don't pop off, I shall be Mrs. Surridge."

The tutor smiled, and put the nuts side by side, as he was directed, on the bar. Alas, Norah flew off with a bounce, quite befitting the little damsel's character!

"Oh, dear," she exclaimed, "how tiresome! And there are Captain Leicester and Eva—it is Eva, isn't it?—burning so brightly side by side."

There was a laugh; a flush on Captain Leicester's face and a visible blush on Eva's. Then young Quarles volunteered to burn a nut with the child, Miss Lucy Walker's having flown off from his. Glorvina had held two nuts in her fingers for some minutes.

"Glorvina," whispered Tim at her side, "may I not try with you?"

"No; we will not risk a false augury," she replied gravely. "Let me see, whom shall I select?" Then, with a sweet indifferent smile at the clergyman, as if the idea of his being a lover were fantastic nonsense—"Mr. Surridge, you shall be my chosen nut."

As she spoke, a flood of crimson rushed over his face. For an instant he looked up at her. What did she read in those despairing passionate eyes? Glorvina started and dropped her nuts. It was not possible to mistake that look of hopeless passion. She did not know very well what to do; but it was surely best to appear not to have seen and understood. She

... If there ... will fly ... ful voice at her side ... and she felt as if ... struck him, as she saw ... pallor which succeeded the glow on the tutor's face as he caught the words.

"Nay," she replied gently, "Mr. Surridge and I are great friends. We shall burn with the calm steadiness of friendship."

And so in fact it proved. The nuts burned clearly and brightly side by side to the last.

Other games were played. They were successively blindfolded, turned out of the room, and returned to touch at hazard four saucers placed in a row—one filled with water, another filled with earth, another with paper, the fourth empty. Lucy upset the water and was declared to be the destined bride of a sailor; Eva put her fingers in the earth, and was consequently told that she would marry one who lived by the land; and Glorvina picked out some pieces of paper, which gave her, of course, to one of the learned professionals. Captain Leicester and young Quarles complained that the Army had no chance in this divination; but Mrs. Coghlan, who entered into the fun, assured them that the water represented all who served their country.

There was much innocent mirth till the children went off to bed. Mr. Coghlan had already gone to arrange a little business still left unsettled.

"Shall we sow hemp-seed to-night?" asked Tim.

"What is that?" was the Englishman's question.

"Well, you take a pocketful of hemp-seed and sow it around the church, singing, 'Hemp-seed, I sow you—hemp-seed, I sow you; let my love come and mow you.' The phantom of the future husband then appears and reaps in dumb show with a sickle; if a lady, she flits by with a scythe."

"By all means let us try it," said the Cornet. "Is the church far off?"

"No; just outside the gates. Let us go! We can wait in the porch and let the hemp-seed sowers go round one by one," said Tim.

"I scarcely like the idea," declared Mrs. Coghlan; "in these times—"

"Oh, mamma," interrupted Eva, who was unusually excited by the fun of the evening, "I don't believe in 'these times;' I believe the Whiteboys are only scarecrows!"

"At any rate," observed Captain Leicester, who also seemed anxious for the excursion, "you will be safe with us; we have swords, and O'Brien can take that tremendous shilelagh of his without which he never stirs."

And so the excursion was settled, in spite of some wild remonstrances from the tutor, who sincerely wished that Mr. Coghlan was there to forbid it. In fact he stole away to that gentleman's study to warn him; but could not find him there, or in his room, and when he returned to the drawing-room he found all the young people gone.

"Mr. Surridge," said Mrs. Coghlan anxiously, "they have all run off like a parcel of silly children. I wish you would be so kind as to go after them and see that no harm comes of their frolic."

The tutor instantly assented to her request, and at once set out after the revellers. It was a clear bright starlight night; the heavens with their myriad stars looked down solemnly on the hushed earth. The only sound he heard as he hurried up the avenue was the whispering of the leaves of the old trees which bordered it. He reached the lodge gate as the church clock struck twelve and then he walked even faster towards it; but though he went at his best speed, he found on reaching the porch, in which the young people were huddled, that Lucy Walker and the Cornet had already sowed their hemp-seed without any result.

"I will go next," declared Glorvina, glancing to the spot where Eva and Leceister were chatting in the shadow of the porch, oblivious evidently of why they had come—"Now!"

And, with a merry nod at them she departed. The others remained chatting. Surridge felt a strong anxiety. The moments went by and appeared endless to him; the others talked cheerfully together; Only he and O'Brien stood at the entrance of the porch, listening. At length James said—

"I think I had better go and see where Miss Desmond is."

"I would," exclaimed O'Brien, "if we had not solemnly pledged ourselves not to follow each other for ten minutes or a quarter of an hour, and it is not that time since she left us."

"I am bound by no promise," replied the tutor, and, without another word, he walked quickly in the direction Glorvina had taken.

The church was very large—it had once been a Catholic cathedral—and he had not reached the end of it when he heard a wild eerie cry. He ran forward, and, turning the corner, saw her leaning against a buttress. Was it the starlight that made her face so pale and gave that awful look to her eyes?

A RAILWAY BRIDGE BURNT.

MILTON, May 4.—A smash up occured here on the Credit Valley railway tonight. While a train was passing through the town a wheel of the caboose broke, which caused the stove to be overturned, setting fire to the car, also to the bridge upon which it stopped. The car and bridge were totally destroyed, also were the rails for about one hundred yards along the track. The conductor was slightly hurt in jumping from the bridge to the ground. The fire occured at 8 p. m.

The [illegible] beauty constituting the com[illegible] in itself, an attraction; [illegible] the flowing richness [illegible] selections, rendered in [illegible] grace, leaving noth[illegible] to be desired but a larger audi[illegible]. With a programme so unique, [illegible] most dangerous to particular[illegible] "Well done," was the universal [illegible]. The magnificent form and [illegible] of Mr. Anderson, the superb character songs and sketches by Mr. McDougal, will long be remembered, while the duett "Don't mean to be [illegible]," was the true outspoken feelings of the sweet singers' hearts, which, doubtless, will soon be reciprocated by some of the young gentlemen present. The European mania caused several gaps in the programme; but hard-shell jokes by the Rev. Chairman kept up the interest; but why a song should be called an "article" we fail to discover. Among the distinguished guests we observed his Worship, the Mayor of Markdale, his Eminence, the Arch-Bishop of Manitoulin, with various prelates from remote parts. The bachelor element was well represented,—single, alone, unblessed they came, without their sisters, their cousins or their aunts.

Yours truly,

OBITUARY.—Another of our old residents, Mr. Robert Hoy, passed away on Friday last, aged 65 years. He had suffered severly from cancer for about two years before his death, which must have been his dearest friend the sweetest and the best. The deceased was buried under the auspices of the Orange Order of which he was an enthusiastic member. The funeral, which took place on Sunday last was a large and impressive one. The Clarksburg Band headed the procession playing the dead march in Saul. The funeral sermon was preached by the Rev. F. D. Brown.—Union Standard.

FIRE AT WILLIAMSFORD.—We regret to learn that on Tuesday afternoon the large Woollen Factory of Messrs. Cliffe & Shaw at Williamsford caught fire, it is supposed from sparks from the engine, and although the hands and others were on the spot, the flames spread with such rapidity that it was found impossible to save the building, which was destroyed with most of contents. The loss will be a severe one to Messrs. Cliffe & Shaw, whilst it will also be a great loss to the village, of which the factory constituted the chief industry.—Times.

VICTIMIZED.—On Thursday last a man who represented himself as a Mr. Hurd, a cattle buyer from Toronto, came to the City Hotel, and stating that he had a drove of cattle coming, wished pre[illegible] for having them fed. He succeeded in getting 50c. from the proprietor. He next went to W[illegible]. He also visited Wilkinson's butcher shop, and proposed selling some of the cattle, getting $1 from Mr. Wilkinson. The latter soon found out that he had been victimized, and had the pretended cattle dealer arrested. He had been having a good time in the meantime, and when arrested had only 85c. left. He was taken before Thos. Scott, Esq., J. P., and remanded for a week.—Times.

A SINGULAR DRIVE.—The other day a friend of ours, with an acquaintance, went for a drive, and having taken the "bit" out of the horse's mouth to allow it to have a "bite" started off at a "two-forty' speed for home without putting the bit in again, and it was curious to see the wheels of the buggy drive through every puddle hole on the road, which were rather numerous. Frequent attempts were made to steer around them, and it was rather odd to notice the smile that appeared on the faces of several Jehus met on the road, but after driving several miles the cause of the 'splashing' that took place was discovered and the wrong made right. It was well that the horse besides being a very fast traveller, possessed another good quality of being very docile or something more serious might have happened.—Review.

ACCIDENT TO JUDGE MACPHERSON.—On Monday evening last, Mr. O'Connor of Walkerton, who was the guest of Judge Macpherson, had just left the parlor for a few minutes when he heard a noise, and running back, found the Judge on the floor, in the midst of flames. It appears that a lamp which stood on a small table had been accidently upset' breaking on the floor, and spreading flames over the carpet. The Judge threw himself on the carpet to smother the flames, when his dressing gown caught fire. Mr. O'Connor immediately snatched a piano cover and with it succeeded in smothering the flames; but not before the Judge had been severly burned, from the effect of which he has since been confined to bed.—Times.

SHOT.—News was received intown the latter part of last week that Mr. F. W. Pearce, of Midway, Kentucky, (brother of Mr. C. C. Pearce, License Inspector, and Mr. A. Pearce of the Tribune,) had been fatally shot by a young man named Williams, with whom he had a dispute. We understand the murderer has been captured, and is now in custody.—Times.

A FALL FROM A WAGGON.—On Sunday last as Mr. & Mrs. McGregor, of Sullivan were driving to church, the back seat of the democrat on which they were sitting was jerked from its place, and they both fell backwards, alighting on their heads, and were badly injured. Mrs. McGregor appears to suffer the most. As they are both advanced in years the result may be very serious.—O. S. Tribune.

DISTRICT MEETING.—The Methodist Ministers of the Owen Sound District will hold their annual District Meeting in the Methodist Church, Owen Sound, commencing on Tuesday, May 17th, at 9 a. m.—O. S. Tribune.

BOMB THROWING AT HOME.—The influence of the late assassination of the Czar has been felt even in this remote region. In fact, it is likely that being blown up by a bomb will soon become the fashionable way of disposing of criminals, they considering it an honor to go off with the same force which royalty in Russia appears to choose. In proof the popularizing of this plan, we would cite an instance which occurred on Saturday night last, on the hill near the R. C. Church. About the last hour, the whole neighborhood was awakened by a terriffic explosion in the direction of a house of bad reputation. On Sunday morning a passer-by was called in to examine the destruction. He describes the scene as follows:—A piece of gass piping, loaded with powder, had been thrown through the window into the house. This exploded, bursting into something over 40 pieces, breaking chairs, bursting an oil can, tearing up the floor, and blowing some of the boards off the sides of the house. A bomb was also thrown int Ben Addy's (colored) house. From this it appears that Canadians can manufacture bombs as well as the Russians, and use them, too. They don't want to be caught at it though, and certain parties are suspected.—O. S. Tribune.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

DEAR SIR,—When subscriptions were being solicited for the purpose of celebrating the Queen's Birthday, it was stated that the grounds for the games and sports were to be chosen as central as possible. Now, it appears the games are to be held at one side of the village. What is the reason of the change? Is it to benefit one particular house? To me it looks very much like it.

ORANGEVILLE

FALL IN SUGAR.—On Saturday, as a carter was turning his wagon in front of one of the stores on Broadway, through some awkwardness one of the barrels, of sugar which formed part of the load, fell among the horses' feet and started them off. Fortunately they were brought up before they had gone far, but not before another sugar-barrel met the fate of the former, and the "sweetness" was scattered in the street. The affair happened a little too early for wasps, but the small boy was in attendance in large quantites.—Gazette.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT.—On Saturday the 23rd ult., an unfortunate accident occurred on the farm of D. Connaway whereby 6 men were seriously injured and Thos. Rowan, of Erin township, will prodeply lose his life, if he is not already dead. The cause was the falling of the bent of a frame shed, which was in course of erection. The foolish custom of forming side and rushing the erection for the sake of the credit of one side winning was the cause of the melancholy occurrence. Thep ratice is to be much deprecated, and should be discontinued.—Gazette.

BURGLARY.--Yesterday moring Chief of Police Wilkins recieved a telegram from Shelburne stating that about sixty watches had been stolen from the store of Mr. A. V. Galbraith, watchmaker there. The Chief is on the track of the burglars, and if he gets his eagle eye on them, they will have to give up "burgling" for some time to come.—Gazette.

MR. Bowler, Brick Maker, has the past week got in a "Martain" Brick Machine which is capable of moulding 20,000 bricks per day. So great is the demand for this class of building material, Mr. B. found it necessary to put in machinery in order to supply the demand.

ONE of our boys went home the other night, as usual, and went to bed. No sooner had he touched the bed than he was seized with a peculiar sensation. When he returned to consciousness he found himself comfortably ensconced on the floor. [CONUNDRUM] Does the fault lie with the boy, or with the hired girl?

ASK your dealers for "Castorine" machine oil, and see that the barrel is branded "Castorine," as none other is genuine.

WE thought sliding was ever for the season, but it appears that we were mistaken, and to prove that we were one of the men engaged in shingling the new shed just erected for the accommodation of the public patronizing the Markdale House, took a slide from the ridge pole and before he was aware of it was nicely seated on the ground. We are happy to say no damage resulted further than the party alluded to prefers standing to a sitting posture.

USE "Castorine" Machine Oil, for all kinds of machinery, it is also excellent for harness and leather, making it water and weather proof. For sale by dealers.

FISHING is all the rage just now, even the fair sex being affected, and it is not an unusual sight to see a score or so wending their way to the fishing grounds. On Saturday last, while one of Markdale's fair daughters was thus engaged, she got a bite.—Whether the fish was too heavy, or her fear of loosing it, she plunged in is not know, but the first thing her companions knew she was seen in the water. Fortunately the young lady was tall, and the water not over deep or the result might have been serious.

THE value of medicens compounded by a thoroughly educated physician and scientific chemist must be apparent to all. As such we take pleasure in commending Dr. J. C. Ayer's Cathartic pills. Public confidence in them has steadily increased until now their use can be said to be universal. Great and permanent popularity does not come without great merit. Our experience convinces us that Ayer's Pills are superior to any others in all the use for which a cathartic medicine is employed. They are pleasent to take, and are perfectly safe, sure and effectual. Ayer's Pills satisfy all the requirements of a reliable family physic and their timely use undoubtedly prolongs many lives and promotes the health and comfort of thousands.—Northern Ohio Democrat.

A CARD OF THANKS.

Brooklin, March 30th, 1881.

To Mr. S. BEAL, Agent Dominion Grange Mutual Insurance Association.

SIR,—I have to thank you for your care in the general selection of risks in your Company, and the directors, for careful management, by which has been secured such an excellent financial standing in four years.

I was one of the first insured in the Company, to the amount of $800, I paid $6, and gave an undertaking besides. My undertaking has been returned to me unassessed, and eighty cents in cash paid back. I have thus secured the most reliable insurance of $800 for four years for five dollars and twenty cents, or sixty cents on the $100 insurance.

The Company appears to be working truly on the Mutual principle, it rarely if ever occurred in Canada that the insured received back any portion of [illegible] Company. May your success be still mor marked in the future.

Yours truly,
THOMAS MCBRIEN,

Cathartic Pills

Combine the choicest cathartic principles in medicine, in proportions accurately adjusted to secure activity, certainty, and uniformity of effect. They are the result of years of careful study and practical experiment, and are the most effectual remedy yet discovered for diseases caused by derangement of the stomach, liver, and bowels, which require prompt and effectual treatment. AYER'S PILLS are specially applicable to this class of diseases. They act directly on the digestive and assimilative processes, and restore regular healthy action. Their extensive use by physicians in their practice, and by all civilized nations, is one of the many proofs of their value as a safe, sure, and perfectly reliable purgative medicine. Being compounded of the concentrated virtues of purely vegetable substances, they are positively free from calomel or any injurious properties, and can be administered to children with perfect safety.

AYER'S PILLS are an effectual cure for Constipation or Costiveness, Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Loss of Appetite, Foul Stomach and Breath, Dizziness, Headache, Loss of Memory, Numbness, Biliousness, Jaundice, Rheumatism, Eruptions and Skin Diseases, Dropsy, Tumors, Worms, Neuralgia, Colic, Gripes, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Gout, Piles, Disorders of the Liver, and all other diseases resulting from a disordered state of the digestive apparatus.

As a Dinner Pill they have no equal.

While gentle in their action, these PILLS are the most thorough and searching cathartic that can be employed, and never give pain unless the bowels are inflamed, and then their influence is healing. They stimulate the appetite and digestive organs; they operate to purify and enrich the blood, and impart renewed health and vigor to the whole system.

THE OLD PARISHIONER AND THE MODERN PARSON.

[BY MARGARET ...]

"Why, John, I haven't seen your face
In church for weeks, I know."
"No, sir, it's such a queerish place—
When it's restored I'll go."

"When it's restored! Why, John, you've seen
The chancel that's just built—
With painted windows, carved oak screen,
And reredos all of gilt.

"With decoration it abounds,
There's a new altar too.
The organ cost three hundred pounds,
It's all restored quite new."

"Yes, ...old Ned, the other day—
What had a stroke, I mean—
He's quite restored to health they say.
But ... gone clean.

"Dark windows may be beautiful
For them as likes the look;
But I, with old eyes getting dull,
Want light to read my book.

"When I was young (you'd think it odd),
The ... climbed in ...
They ... made me think of God
And all His tender care.

"But now if I look up, I greet
Them figures done in paints;
I'd go a long way not to meet
Saints, if such folks be saints."

"Ah, John, they didn't teach high art
When you were put to school;
But how do you like the singing part—
Come, that's a better rule?"

"Why, sir, they're thinking far too much
How tunes go now-a-days;
Give me the old hundredth psalm and such,
That's more what I call praise.

"We used to sing it—such a crowd—
Maybe the notes weren't true;
Maybe we sung a bit too loud,
Because our hearts sang too.

"But now grandson—pert young lad—
He says he's got much higher;
Says he, 'You're not to sing, granddad,
You'll interrupt the choir.'

"'You thinks a deal about that thing,
The choir,' says I to him;
But I can't see why you can't sing
Without your bedgown, Jim.'

"New chancel's mighty fine, but ne'er
Can we make out, who knows
What's gone with the Commandments there—
What have you done with those?

"You're all for pretty tiles and bricks,
For carving gilt and scroll;
What good could them tall candlesticks
Do to a poor lost soul?

"Sir, there's a many things restored
No use to such as me;
We want to hear about the Lord,
You only talk of She!

"We used to pray the prayers, and then
The parson prayed from heart;
Now, you all seem to think 'Amen'
The most important part.

"But, sir, I scarcely like telling you
How it sounds when you intones."
"Well, John, what is it like? Speak true."
"Machine what grinds the bones!

"We had a minister once, sir—
'Twas long before you came—
A man that was a minister,
Not only in the name.

"Your decorations, copes and stoles,
He didn't need such aid;
He cared too much for our poor souls
To think how his gown was made.

"I've seen him pleading with us thus,
With tears in eyes he stood;
Somehow those tears preached more to us
Than twenty sermons could.

"The rich and poor came far and near,
The church would overflow;
It's getting full again I hear—
Folks come to see the Show.

"Now it's most like the play I see
In London town one day,
All very well for a play, maybe,
But not for prayer, I say.

"Do you think, sir, such a queerish whim
Can please the Lord, forsooth?
He said—we were to worship Him
In spirit and in truth.

"So that's why I don't come, you know;
I will when it's restored;
But now, sir, I don't dare to go,
Because I fears the Lord."

CASTING A MONSTER CYLINDER.

FORTY FIVE TONS OF MOLTEN METAL SUCCESSFULLY POURED INTO A MOULD.

[From the N. Y. Times.]

What is declared to be the largest steam-engine cylinder in the world was cast yesterday afternoon in the Morgan Iron Works of John Roach & Son, at the foot of East Ninth Street. It is 18 feet long, 9 feet 2 inches in diameter, and required for its casting 45 tons, or 90,000 pounds, of gun-metal. It is intended to accommodate a piston stroke of 14 feet. The metal in the thinnest part is 1¾ inches thick, and the flanges at the top and bottom are 2¾ inches thick by 5¾ inches wide. Under the top flange the cylinder has a belt 16 inches wide, another 6 inches wide above the bottom flange, and between these two three more belts, each 6 inches in width. The thickness of the metal at the belts is 2¼ inches. A nozzle for the upper steam-chest is cast on the cylinder, with an opening 14¼ by 68 inches, the metal on the top of this nozzle being 1¾ inches in thickness, and on the sides and bottom 1¼ inches. The casting of this massive piece of work was done in a mould constructed of brick, lined with loam, the outside being covered with heavy iron plates to prevent the matrix from bursting when the molten metal was poured in. The mould is constructed of one cylinder of brick and loam within another, the space between them being the required thickness of the casting, the flanges, belts, and other parts of the work being accurately delineated in the matrix. Over half the mould was sunk in the solid earth which forms the flooring of the iron works. It required the metal 3 hours and 20 minutes to melt, and the 90,000 pounds were then transferred by the labor of 100 men to two huge tank-ladles, each having a capacity of about 15 tons, and two large crane-ladles. The tanks were connected with the mould by pipes, and the crane-ladles were attached to huge cranes. At 1 o'clock John Roach, who personally supervised the casting, gave the order to begin the pouring. The molten metal was turned into the mould from the two tanks on either side, and at the same time the two crane-ladles were swung over, and from all four a red stream of liquid metal began to flow into the matrix. The air of the room became so heated that it was with great discomfort that the few gentlemen who were invited to witness the casting were able to remain. Among the guests was Mr. Borden, the agent of the Old Colony Steamboat Company, and according to his timing it took precisely two and a half minutes to complete the pouring and fill the mould. The operation was watched attentively by Mr. Roach and his foreman, and when it was completed, both pronounced the casting to have been successful. It will require about ten days for the metal thoroughly to cool, and for several days it will remain red hot. When perfectly solidified, the upper part of the mould will be demolished, and the cylinder will then be dug from its resting place in the ground. It is intended for the engine of a new sidewheel steamer.

REMEDY FOR SCARLET FEVER.

Dr. E. Woodruff, for nineteen years a practising physician at Grand Rapids, Michigan, furnishes the Springfield Republican with the following remedy for that much dreaded disease, the scarlet fever:

"Wash the child from head to foot with strong soda water, warm, then wipe dry. Then immediately bathe freely with oil from beef marrow or oil from butter, applied freely. Then give freely catnip tea, or some good sweatening article, pennyroyal, etc. Repeat every half hour, or as often as they get worrisome or wakeful, and in one or two days they will be entirely cured.

I have been called to cases where they have been fully broken out, and in this way entirely cured in twenty-four hours. I have had thirty cases on hand at a time, and never lost a case in my life. But now I am old and about to give up my business, and I see by the papers the town is infected with the epidemic I wish to do all the good I can. It is so simple. You do not need to call a doctor. A good nurse can attend to them. If by opening the pores of the skin and sweating you can let off the poison, which is an animalcule, or animal in the blood, the cure is complete.

The same is equally good in fevers of all kinds, hard colds and coughs. I take the ground that all diseases are caused by a stoppage of the pores of the skin, retaining the poison, or living animals in the blood, and all you have to do at first is to open the doors of the system and let them out, or drive them out. All people know a warm bath is good. But you apply the oil to the skin and it keeps the pores open for a long time and gives the enemy a chance to get out. I hope all will try it and they will soon be convinced."

CONFIDENTIAL.

The other morning when Mr. Jones entered his family drug store to have a prescription put up he found a new clerk in attendance. Mr. Jones has considerable curiosity, and while he waited he began:

"Been here long?"
"Only two days."
"Going to stay?"
"I think so."
"Old clerk gone for good?"
"Yes."
"Come from New York?"
"No. I came from St. Louis."
"Didn't like the town, I suppose?"
"Oh, fairly."
"Got a better offer here, I presume?"
"Well, not much better."
"Druggist related to you?"
"No."
"Going to marry his daughter?"
"Haven't thought of it."

There was a brief rest until the clerk had finished his labors, and then he beckoned Mr. Jones into the back room and said:

"You look like a person who can be depended on, and I'll tell you in confidence why I came here. I liked St. Louis, and I had good wages, but I happened to kill three or four persons by putting up wrong prescriptions, and I thought a change of location would relieve my sorrow. This is on the square, you know, and nothing is to be said unless I lay out two or three of your leading citizens, in which case I shall give up the drug business altogether and go sailing a sand barge."

Jones went out feeling his left ear and looking into vacancy, and his sore throat got well without the help of the gargle.

LAUGHTER IN CHURCH.

The Shrewsbury Chronicle says:—"On Sunday last, an announcement, which caused some amusement to the congregation, was made in a church which is situated in the northwesterly suburb, and outside the boundary of the borough. The clergyman had just given out, among other announcements, that in the afternoon a christening service would be held, and that parents desiring to have their children christened must bring them to the church before 3 p.m., when the clerk, who is a little deaf, convulsed the congregation by solemnly adding, that those who had not got them could be supplied with them in the vestry after the service at sixpence each. It transpired that the clerk thought the clergyman had announced that he intended to adopt a new hymn book at the Easter services—hence the grotesque blunder."

And old couple were walking down street the other day, reading signs when they ran across one "Johnson's Shirt Store." "Well I declare?" exclaimed the old lady. "I wonder who tore it?"

A young woman of Springfield, Mass., was determined to circumvent a young man whom she suspected of a desire to escort her home from the Baptist church sociable. The entertainment was held in the basement and she laid a plan to gain the audience room above by means of the back stairs and to escape thence to the street while her would-be cavalier was preparing to pounce upon her at the basement door. All went well until a false step in the darkness sent her splashing into the baptistry, which had remained open since the previous Sunday.

SAVED BY HER CALVES.

The utility of a pair of patent sawdust calves was strikingly illustrated last Saturday in Philadelphia. Shortly after 4 o'clock in the afternoon a mad cur, pursued by two perspiring policemen, dashed into Eighth street from Walnut and caused such a flutter among the petticoats as that locality has seldom witnessed. Among the femininity that was bouncing along was a nymph who flings her shapely legs before the footlights of the Grand Central theater. This female could not face a rabid canine, so she bundled up her petticoats and made a dash with the others for safety. Her legs, which had served her so well before, did not go back on her this time, for the mad dog, probably attracted by the development below the knee, drove his poisonous fangs into her stocking and went howling on. The ballet dancer, more dead than alive, was dragged into a drug-store, where an eager and anxious crowd of men examined her legs. Their fears were allayed, however when the discovery was made that the canine had only destroyed the sawdust padding which the young woman had tied to a lean shank to give it roundness and attractiveness. The eager anxious and solicitous men departed much sadder and a heap wiser.

ROASTED TO DEATH.

An accident occurred here at an early hour this morning which resulted in the terrible death of a father and son. David Reese and family resided at about three miles from this place. Between 1 and 2 o'clock this morning their house was discovered to be on fire. The sleeping apartments were filled with smoke and the occupants were awakened with great difficulty. The family escaped from the burning building at the risk of their lives. Mr. Reese and his son then made an effort to save some necessary clothing, when suddenly and while they were inside, the building fell in with a crash upon them, the flaming timbers covering them and roasting them to death. One loud, terrible cry was heard, and then all was over. Mrs. Reese also narrowly escaped with her life, but was terrible burned about her hands and feet while fighting her way out of the flames. Hundreds of neighbors soon flocked to the scene of the terrible disaster, and when the flames had got down the bodies of the victims were removed from the ashes. The cause of the fire is unknown.

PROPOSED REVISION OF THE PSALMS IN METRE.

At the meeting of the Synod of Toronto and Kingston of the Presbyterian Church in Canada on Wednesday an overture was read from Brock Street Church, Kingston, representing that the General Assembly should be overtured to take action looking to providing a new version of the Psalms in metre, as the present version, owing to faults in metre, could not well be used in the churches. This overture was submitted to the Presbytery of Kingston, and by them referred to the synod in 1879; but it was not considered until 1880, when it was laid on the table for the year. Rev. Andrew Wilson, of Brock Street Church Kingston, said the revision han been adopted by the United Presbyterian Church of America and by the Presbyterian Church in Ireland. There were many obsolete terms used in the revision in use in Canada. To say nothing of errors in translation. There was also lack of variety in metre, giving no opportunity of singing many tunes with which the people were familiar. He believed the revision in use by the North American Church was a very good one, and he would be glad to see it adopted. After some discussion the overture was laid on the table.

A newly-married couple at the Cleveland railroad station amused the passengers. It was evident, says a local reporter, that they were slowly consuming by a terrible burning of the unquenchable flame of young love. They wandered to and fro along the entire length of the station, the one arm of the swain encircling the waist of Mrs. Swain, and the other bearing their luggage, a three-pound Saratoga. After exercising sufficiently they repaired to the waiting-room, and there whiled away the remaining time before the arrival of the train by billing, cooing, caressing and kissing, until even the clerk in the fruit stand smiled. He was politely told by the man with the wife that he was lacking sense. Several others who didn't know what love is, were also unable to suppress their merriment. As excess of feeling, no matter of what kind, will turn on the faucet to the fountain of tears, this young couple wept copiously. At last the train arrived and the loving pair departed. No doubt the passengers on the train received their money's worth of amusement during the ride.

HEROIC RESCUE.—On Monday afternoon, a fishing boat from Big Island arrived off Southampton, but owing to the large quantity of loose ice she could not make the harbor. After making several attempts to land, she got fastened in the ice, and all on board would have perished but for the aid rendered them by three fishermen of the port, named Frank Coosley, M. Murray, and George Dobson, who procured a small boat, and managed to drag it three miles over the ice, until they reached them. On getting to the boat they found it contained three persons, two men and one woman, all of whom would have perished with cold before morning. The woman was perfectly helpless. Great praise is due to the men, who so bravely risked their lives to save those in distress.—Pt. Elgin Free Press

IN THE MIDST OF PERIL.

By the Author of "Hidden Quicksands," "A Relentless Foe," "Maggie O'Connor's Fortunes," &c., &c.

"Miss Desmond, have you been frightened? What is it?" he asked greatly alarmed by her look.

She burst into a wild laugh.

"You—you!" she cried. "Save me!"—and she fell suddenly into his arms. She had fainted.

Distressed and alarmed as he was a sensation of sudden rapture passed through the tutor's frame as he clasped her. It was a keen delight to support this beautiful girl in his arms with her head resting upon his breast; but he would not yield to his selfish pleasure for a moment and he shouted for assistance. In a few second the whole party responded to his call. Lucy ran instantly with Mr. Quarles to the sexton's house, which was near at hand, for the key of the vestry into which the gentlemen then bore Glorvina, placed her by Eva's directions flat on the floor, and sprinkled her face with water, while Eva and Lucy rubbed her hands. At length Glorvina opened her eyes with a deep sigh, and gazed round with bewildered look.

"Where am I?" she asked.

"Quite safe under the church roof," replied James gently.

"Oh"—sitting up and pushing the hair from her forehead—"I have been ill, I think!"

"Yes dear you fainted," said Eva tenderly. "Are you better?"

"Much better—quite well," replied the girl, making an effort to rise, in which Mr. Surridge assisted her. "What an absurd illness! I never fainted before in my life."

"Did you see anything dear Glora, that frightened you?" asked her cousin.

Glorvina started, shuddered voilently, and turned still whiter than she had been before.

"No questions now, if you please, Miss Coghlan," interupted James. "We had better get Miss Desmond home at once."

Glorvina readily agreed to the proposal, accepted the tutor's arm, and the party considerably mystified and puzzled, turned to the house.

Mrs. Coghlan was frightened when Glorvina, deathly pale, was led into the drawing room, and at once hushing all inquires she took her up to her room. The others stood round the fire, puzzled and bewildered; but James noticed that Captain Leicester was still by Eva's side, soothing her alarm with very lover-like devotion.

"I can't imagine what Glorvina has seen," said Lucy Walker. "Something horrible, I am sure. She is so brave and strong that it must have been something supernatural to have started her."

But no one knew. Mrs. Coghlan returned to say that Glorvina was better, and would not appear that night.

"And indeed," she added, "it is time all you foolish young people went to bed also, for it is past one."

To Eva it was a relief to say good-night to the guests, and she ran off to see how Glorvina was; but she did not, to her surprise, find her in her chamber. She hastened at once to her mother's room.

"Mamma, where is Glorvina?"

"She is with your father in the study dear. She will be up by-and-by; and Eva, ask her no questions to-night."

Eva promised, though she was a very martryr to curiosity, and, returning to her cousin's room, waited patiently till Glorvina very pale and exhausted, appeared; then she made haste to undress her and get her into bed; and by that time Mrs. Coghlan appeared with a glass of wine-and water, which she insisted on Glorvina drinking. The girl meekly obeyed her, and then, sinking wearily back on her pillow, closed her eyes with a deep sigh.

"Let her sleep. Go to your room at once, Eva," commanded her mother. "I will sit with Glory a little while. Good-night dear." And, kissing her daughter, Mrs. Coghlan dismissed her.

CHAPTER. VII.

"If you please Mr. Surridge, will you go to papa in the study?" asked Teddy at his tutor's door, before James was dressed the next morning.

"I will go directly," was the repy; and the young clergyman, hurrying his toilet, was in two or three minutes in Mr. Coghlan's study, and he found that gentleman with a very harassed look on his face.

"Good morning, Mr. Surridge," he said. "You found Glorvina, I hear last night doing those absurd rites. Did you see anything that might have frightened the girl?"

"Nothing," replied the tutor.

"Nor hear anything."

"Yes, I heard a most painful wail or cry—I suppose it saw Miss Desmond's scream of terror."

Mr. Coghlan shook his head.

"No," he said; "she heard it also. The fact is, my dear fellow, she has been dreadfully alarmed. A figure appeared to her, she tells me, with floating hair, a death like-face, and blood-stained white robe, and told her that Death, not a lover, was on her footsteps—that unless Dan O'Rourke were saved not one of this family would be alive at Christmas."

"Good Heaven!" ejaculated the astonished tutor.

"It is a fact. But you and I who know of the late warning can read the mystery aright. The supposed banshee—for it was evidently an imitation one—was no doubt an accomplice of the O'Rourke faction, and the warning was thus impressed the lady as their last chance. Moreover Glory is rich and patriotic, and they have not miscalculated on its possible effect on her. She came to me last night to implore me not to appear against Dan O'Rourke. But of course I must. Honour and duty command it. And ... sacred to an ... Irishman ...

"Why, ... words!" exclaimed Mr. Coghlan. "And indeed, I think you're been right in a way—an Irish way at least"—laughing. "And now I must entreat you, while I am absent to take great care of my treasures, Surridge. Don't let them venture beyond the grounds; and if you want another man ask Tim O'Brien to come and spend a night or two here."

"No! Mr. Coghlan," said the tutor firmly, "if you will allow me to advise you, you will not think of having Mr. O'Brien as a guard here; he is reckless, careless, reckless. We shall be safer alone; or if we need more hands, there is a man on the farm we can trust."

"As you please," assented the Squire. "I have no great liking for Tim myself; but I should not hesitate to make him useful, and he is a strong fellow. Well, now to breakfast with what appetite we may."

Miss Desmond did not appear at breakfast, and the other members of the party were rather late. The guests were to leave that morning—except Lucy—and it was decided that they should all accompany their host to the town where he would take the Doublin coach. The tutor requested Mr. Coghlan to allow him to accompany them.

"I have some purchases to make," he stated; "and as I do not wish to leave the Priory again until you return I had better go to day."

Mr. Coghlan assented; and after their farewells had been said, they drove off all together in the old and seldom-used family coach. O'Brien and Captain Leicester both offered their services to the Squire in taking care of the ladies during his absence.

"Thank you both," he said cheerily. "I shall be obliged if you will keep an eye on them; but they are quite safe with my friend Surridge."

The tutor saw Mr. Coghlan safely off by the coach, and then went about his own purchases. They were of a rather singular description. He went to an ironmonger's and inquired if his order sent by post had been executed. Yes, half a dozen thin, but strong iron bars and staples were ready. When should the tradesman send to fix them? His customer—who was absolutely unknown personally to him—would take them himself. He would also take a supply of nails, screws and a screw-driver sent to the Shamrock Inn for him.

The order was duly executed for him, and the family coach thus laden carried the tutor back to the Priory. He ordered the footman to take the packages to his own room, and then joined the family. He was glad to see that Miss Desmond was with them e but it was a very pale Glorvina who rose and gave him her hand.

Then he had to relate how Mr. Coghlan had gone off, and how the town looked; he also produced a newspaper and the last new book, which had been one of his thoughtful purchase for Mrs. Coghlan and the ladies. Nor had he forgotten a puzzle for Teddy and a doll for Norah.

The tutor, at Mr Coghlan's request had moving to, and was to remain during his absence in, a guest-chamber on the west side of the house which commanded the great stair-case and from which also he could see all over the great centre inner court.

When moved his books and wardrobe, assisted by Teddy, the boy had persuaded him to go and look at the "haunted rooms," as they called them—on the north side. They were gloomy, lacking sun, and the furniture was old and mouth-eaten. The rooms opened into each other, with havy massiven oaken doors. Ode windows did not look out upon the inner court as the south bed-room did, but upon the park.

"They are awful dull rooms, ain't they?" said Teddy. "Norah and I very seldom play here, though we have never seen gosts."

"What heavy doors!" observed the tutor, "But they are without fastenings, it would be impossible to break them open, I should thik."

The boy did not answer him; indeed the words scarcely seemed to be aedressed to him. The tutor went the end window of the last chamber—it had two—and, opening the lattice gazed out and downward. It appeared to be placed at an immense height up. The old moat had been filled in at the north-west corner, and its great depth made the window higher by twenty feet than it would otherwise have been.

"Are the rooms below them used?"

"Oh, no, sir!" said the boy. "They are just like prisons, with great bars of iron at the window. They have not been used since Lord Edward's time, Murphy says. They can't be even made into store-rooms, they are so damp; but you can see them if you like."

The tutor declined the offer; but from that day he resolved to turn the upper north rooms to account; and Mr. Coghlan's absence gave him the desired opporunity.

The morning after the gentlmam's departure, James Surridge rose at day-break; and before breakfast had conveyed his yesterday's purchases of bolts, bars, screws, and nails to the haunted rooms. His idea was to make the apartments by these fastenings useful as a fortress, should the house at any time be attacted by the rebels, who would then have nine doors to burst open before they could reach the family in the last room, affording an amount of delay which might bring succour.

When Teddy started off, after his lessons, to play with Norah, the tutor at once proceeded to exert his skill as a putter-on of staples and bolts; and he was not a bad workman. He had succeded in completing four of these sets of fastenings and was about to commence the fifth, when a light footstep struck on his ears and looking up, he percieved Miss Desmond standing looking at him in utter amazement.

KIMBERLY correspondence came ot hand when going to press. Will appear next week.

Mr Alex Rutledge paid $700 instead of $500 stated in our columns a week ago. Our mistake.

MESSR Hill Bros. have opened out their spring stock of Millinery, and solicit an inspection of the same advertisment next week.

The proprietor of BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS challenges the world to produce the record of a medicine that has achieved a more wonderful success, or better credentials in so short a period of time as has this great BloodPurifier and System Renovator. Its cures are the marvels of the age. Sample Bottles 10 cents.

WE would call special attention to the advertisment of Mr. Geo. Nixon, of Dundalk to be found on our third page. We have not room this week to speak of Mr. Nixon's establishment as it deserves but would recommend all who want a first class article, at a fair price, to give him a call.

An honest medicine is the noblest work of man- and their is no remedy that is more justly meritorious in 'curing the ills that flesh is heir to' than Burdock Blood Bitters, the Great Blood Purifier and System Renovator ... Liver Complaint, Dys[illegible] ... Kidney, Com[illegible] ... arising from ... [illegible] bowels or disordered secretions, and the best Nervine and Tonic in the world.

WANTED.—10.000 dozen Eggs, and 10.000 Rolls of Butter, for which the highest price will be paid. Reynolds & Son's.

THE Ladies Aid of the C. M. Church Markdale hold their annual Bazaar and concert on the 24th inst. There will also be a dinner in conection with the Bazaar. The dinner and Bazar will be held in the frame building next the STANDARD Office and the concert in Dufferin Hall. Dinner 25c Concert 25c. Tickets for concert and dinner 40c. For particulars see posters.

For all purposes of a family medicine HAGYARD'S YELLOW OIL will be found invaluable. Immediate relief will follow its use. It relieves pain, cures chilblains, frostbites, scalds burns, corns, rheumatism, neuralgia, &c., &c. For internal, use it is none the less wonderful. One or two doses frequently cure sore throat. It will cure croup in a few minutes. A few bottles has often cured asthma. Colic has been cured in fifteen minutes by a teaspoonful dose. It cures with the utmost rapidity. It is really a wonderful medicine.

As a health renewer Burdock Blood Bitters acts like a charm. In Malaria, Bilious Complaints, Scrofula and all disorders of the Blood, Liver and Kidneys, this great combination of Vegetable Medicines proves a certain specific. A few doses regulate the bowels and as a restorative Tonic it has no equal. Trial Bottles 10 Cents.

TEACH THE BOYS TO BE HELPFUL.—You make a mistake, mother, when you teach Jennie always to put her things in their right place, but permit Joseph to leave his lying anywhere. Do not wait so much on the boys. There should be one rule in the household, so far as order is concerned, for sons and daughters, not, as so often their are two very dissimilar rules. Let the boys learn to make beds, and set the table, to help about the house, it will make them not less manly, but more gentlemanly.

Burdock Blood Bitters is not a Whiskey Stimulant or fancy drink to pander to the depraved appetite of the intemperate, but a pure vegetable life-giving Tonic and regulator of the Secretions. It acts promptly on the Bowels, the Liver, the Blood and the Kidneys, purifying and giving tone to the entire system. Try a Sample Bottle which costs only 10 Cents Large Bottles $1.00.

Neither the syndicate, the Scott Act, or the Irish question cause half the sensational comment, that is caused by the popularity of BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS. This great remedy is marvellous in its success in curing Chronic disease when other medicines have failed. It is the best Blood Purifying Tonic and Liver Invigorator known. A specific for all diseases of Blood, Liver and Kidneys. Sample Bottles 10 cents.

EUGENIA.

Correspondence to the STANDARD.

A GREAT deal of the fall wheat in this section of the country has had to be ploughed up, and the ground is being re-sown with Spring Wheat or Barley. This is going to entail a heavy loss to farmers, as a greater area of fall wheat was sown than in previous years. Those who have been lucky enough to sow late will not suffer so bad. Should other causes of loss not interfere farmers are working their level best both man and beast to catch up with the season.

Although Eugenia is not one of the fastest go-ahead towns in the world it can claim its share of enterprise when the Fishing season comes round. From the numerous spots dug behind old buildings, old logs turned over, and every conceivable place where angleworms are supposed to hide, one would suppose a good trade was being done in that line, and that the unwary worm must have a hard time of it. We seldom hear anything in the way of the Big Fish yarns that reach us from some of the more ambitious little towns around us.

Farmers are becoming alive to the importance of improving their breeds of cattle, sheep, &c. The age of scrubs is surely doomed, and high time it is.

The potato bug may now be seen around the fields no doupt prospecting in regard to future operations. Who in the world invented Tatey Bugs, anyhow?

COURTS OF REVISION.

GLENELG.—On the 30th of may, in the Township Hall.

ARTEMESIA.—On June 6th in the Town Hall, Flesherton.

SEVERAL communications and other articles left over till next week.

NOTICE.—Strayed from his home, near Dundalk on the 7th May, a young man of unsound mind, aged 24; Dark complection dark mustache, dressed in drab drill trousers, Grey flannel shirt, straw hat, without coat or vest. Any person who can give any information as to his where-abouts, will confer a great favor to his father.—WM BOWLES Dundalk P. O. county of Grey.

COLLAPSE OF A BUILDING.—A two story brick building occupied by Messrs Grant & Chellew as a Furniture Factory collapsed on Wednesday, the south wall falling outward and going into the cellar recently dug for the new Brick block of Messrs Reid and McDougal. It is generally supposed it was caused by removing too much of the earth from the foundation, while digging the cellar above mentioned, Mr Chellew was in the building at the time, and had a miraculous escape. Persons outside hearing the cracking called to him to run out, which he did promptly and had just succeeded in reaching the door when the building fell. Considerable of the Furniture was irretrievably ruined, and most of it more or less damaged. We haved not learned what Messrs Grant and Chellew's loss is. The building is owned by Mr Wilson Benson who estimates his loss at about $800.

GLENELG AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

SIR,—It is indeed rare that a "Director" of any Society appears in public to criticize his compeers, but still more surprising that one who was representative for others regarding the matter of which he complains, and a consenting party to the settlement should so act.

Will it believed that this matter, in which "A Director" speaks so hard of his fellow-directors, was laid before the Commissioner of Agriculture all the evidence possible was had in review, and the sum recommended by him to be accepted was $122.25 only, that there was not sufficient evidence for the balance of $28, and that, a director, fully endorsed this recommendation. But such are the facts and yet this strange man, "a director," berates the other directors, and almost calls them dishonest, (limpingly so.) I might ask by what law he is governed, or by what "hocus-pocus" principle. Right with the Commissioner, he is entirely wrong with the Directors, and urging a different course. Surely the man is beside himself!

The Directors of the Glenelg Agricultural Society are proud to announce that they courted no man's favour in this matter. They appealed to the highest authority, and deputed the very man who complains, and letters in our possession prove most conclusively what I have stated.

The Directors have acted for the benefit of the Society only, and did not feel disposed to risk losing the government money and put the Society to expense and endanger it's existence by trying to recover a matter of which (while it probably did exist) they had not evidence to prove. They have kept faith with the public and intend to do so while entrusted with the management of the Society.

The only difference is that they have no feud with the late Secretary beyond the sum found and proven due to the Society, and it would have been better for "a Director" if he had stated things as they are.

Your's Truly,
A DIRECTOR.

HOPEVILLE.

From a Correspondent.

At a barn raising, on the farm of John Scarlet everything went smoothly until all was complete das far as the raising of the barn was concerned, but the boys got like the moon sometimes, pretty full, and late in the evening actualy flowed over with profane language, and their pugilistic proclivities got the better of their judgment. Mr. Scarlet got a wound on the head but not dangerous. Boy's dont take too much again when it can be had free.

ORANGEVILLE

POLITENESS.—On Saturday a young lady was observed making her way from the T. G. & B. depot with a large valise in her hand. A young man who was going along the opposite side of the street, also carying a valise, crossed over to her side and, on overtaking her, asked to be allowed to carry the valise. Now this was very nice on the young man's part, but we have been wondering since then if he would have been so eager to relieve her had she been ugly,—not very ugly, you know, but cross-eyed, or with a broken nose, say, or a wry-neck, or a red head. —Gazette.

POLICE WANTED.—Orangeville presents the curious spectacle of the county town without a single policeman. Such being the case, of course rowdies have it their own way, and our town will very soon have an unenviable reputation, if indeed it has not already acquired it. Our town Council should not, and must not, allow cheese-paring motives of economy to interfere with the proper and just arrangements for the peace of the town. —Gazette.

FORCIBLE ENTRY.—A case of some intrest was tried before the Mayor on Saturday in which Walter Colthard, of the Masson manufacturing company was tried for making forcible entries into a store belonging to John Munn, of this town, thereafter removing certain implements belonging to the above company whose affairs are in course of liquidation. Chief Constable Watkins had arrested the prisoner the same morning in the Paisley House. Mr. J. P. McMillan, Crown Counsel, prosecuted, and Mr. Robb defended Mr. Munn gave evidence to the effect that the door was locked, and that when he saw it after the removal of the goods, the lock was hanging as if the staple had been drawn, and the goods, he found had been removed. A young man of the name of Henry had seen Messrs. Colthard and Beaty at the store on the day in question, and was sure the door was secure before they meddled with it, as he had tried it, wishing to get in him self. He could not say which of them opened it, but he was quite sure one of them did it. After cross examination, which only elicited to confirmation of the above statement (a some what irregular piece of procedure, by the way) the Court dismissed the charge. Squire Wilson, Reeve of Mono, occupied the bench along with his Worship. We understand the case is to come up afresh against both Colthard and Beatty, for Munn is "a stayer."—Gazette.

A man has invented a process by which he proprosss to improve the worst case of bald head, by simply planting upon them fresh crops of hair taken from the heads of other persons. Now why not graft on a new head at once? We know scores of men who would be vastly benefitted by the process.

A CARD OF THANKS.

Brooklin, March 30th, 1881.
To Mr. S. BEAL, Agent Dominion Grange Mutual Insurance Association

SIR,—I have to thank you for your care in the general selection of risks in your Company, and the directors, for careful management, by which has been secured such an excellent financial standing in four years.

I was one of the first insured in the Company, to the amount of $800, I paid $6, and gave an undertaking besides. My undertaking has been returned to me unassessed, and eighty cents in cash paid back. I have thus secured the most reliable insurance of $800 for four years for five dollars and twenty cents, or sixty cents on the $100 insurance.

The Company appears to be working truly on the Mutual principle, it rarely if ever occurred in Canada that the insured received back any portion of the money paid in to an insurance Company. May your success be still mor marked in the future.

Yours truly,
THOMAS McBRIEN,

GREAT ANNUAL

CLEARIG SALE,

AT THE

POST OFFICE STORE,

FLESHERTON.

In order to make room for heavy Spring Importations now arriving daily, I have decided reducing my present large and well selected and assorted stock of

GENAERAL DRY GOODS, FURS, MILLIERY,

Ready-Made Clothing, BOOTS AND SHOES.

Hats, Caps and Groceries

TO THE LOWEST POINT POSSIBLE,

and in order to do so,

Will Sell at and Under COST,

FOR THE NEXT THIRTY DAYS.

The stock is all new, well bought, and well worth the attention of the closest buyers. In GROCERIES you will find everything of First-Class Value.

As I do not pursue the course of some of our windy Merchants of our neighboring Villages, of sending out numerous samples of cheap trash (with unscrupulous recommendations) outside our natural business relations, in order to impress the public that they are not properly treated by their more honorable dealers, and draw custom from the many. You will find everything that I just as I represent it, and as good value as you can possibly get for your money anywhere, as I have always held that honorable dealing is the only true course for a business man.

My Groceries are all bought for strictly nett cash, consequently I can and will sell at

The Lowest Possible Prices!

For CASH and FARM PRODUCE

BUT NOT FOR CREDIT.

I have also in stock and for sale, a large quantity of

PURE SEED GRAIN!

Such as White Russian, Glasgow, Red Chaff, and other varieties of Spring wheat. Also Pure Clean Peas, Oats and Barley. Prime Timothy and Clover Seed; also Fresh Garden Seeds, and as it pays each and every Farmer to sow clean seed, you will make money by paying a few cents extra, and purchasing a good article.

I am now selling large quantities of

COARSE LAND SALT,

FOR MANURE,

Which will pay every Farmer Five Dollars for every one invested in it, and as I am anxious that every Farmer in this locality and neighboring Townships shall try it, I have decided on selling to each and every one of them at the Lowest Cash Price laid down by the carload from the Manufacturers, and bought for next cash at Bottom Prices.

I would also intimate that my

THE BEST REMEDY

FOR Diseases of the Throat and Lungs.

AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL.

In diseases of the pulmonary organs a safe and reliable remedy is invaluable. AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL is such a remedy, and no other so eminently merits the confidence of the public. It is a scientific combination of the medicinal principles and curative virtues of the finest drugs, chemically united, of such power as to insure the greatest possible efficiency and uniformity of results. It strikes at the foundation of all pulmonary diseases, affording prompt relief and rapid cures, and is adapted to patients of any age or either sex. Being very palatable, the youngest children take it readily. In ordinary Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Influenza, Clergymen's Sore Throat, Asthma, Croup, and Catarrh, the effects of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL are magical, and multitudes are annually preserved from serious illness by its timely and faithful use. It should be kept at hand in every household for the protection it affords in sudden attacks. In Whooping-cough and Consumption there is no other remedy so efficacious, soothing, and helpful.

Low prices are inducements to try some of the many mixtures, or syrups, made of cheap and ineffective ingredients, now offered, which, as they contain no curative qualities, can afford only temporary relief, and are sure to deceive and disappoint the patient. Diseases of the throat and lungs demand active and effective treatment; and it is dangerous experimenting with unknown and cheap medicines, from the great liability that these diseases may, while so trifled with, become deeply seated or incurable. Use AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, and you may confidently expect the best results. It is a standard medical preparation, of known and acknowledged curative power, and is as cheap as its careful preparation and fine ingredients will allow. Eminent physicians, knowing its composition, prescribe it in their practice. The test of half a century has proven its absolute certainty to cure all pulmonary complaints not already beyond the reach of human aid.

AND THEN.

And then, when the glorious sunlight
Of God's eternal love
That has ever kept your pathway bright,
Beams on you from above.

In that world unknown to sorrow
Where all tears are wiped away,
May the portals of glory usher
You into eternal day.

May you in the brightest mansion
Of that all glorious home
Find a peace, a joy, and welcome
'Round God's eternal throne.

May your song then blend with the angels'
When the hosts of heaven shall ring;
May your voice take up the chorus
While the glad hosannahs ring.

When the thousand times ten thousand
Of God's redeemed shall meet,
And you are among that number,
Will your joy not be complete?

And then, from the farthest distant shore
The blood-washed throng shall come,
With a soul made clear and a heart made pure,
To join in the welcome home.

And then, when the crown for each child of [illegible] grace
That have onward and upward striven,
Is placed on each head by the King of Kings,
Reserved to that day in heaven.

May your brow wear the brightest diadem
Of all that glorious throng,
And the seat nearest God's right hand be yours,
And the gladdest be your song.

IN THE MIDST OF PERIL.

By the Author of "Hidden Quicksands," "A Relentless Foe," "Maggie O'Connor's Fortunes," &c., &c.

"What can you be doing, Mr. Surridge?" she exclaimed. "Putting on fastenings to doors that are never used?"

"But it is possible that we may require to use them," hesitated the tutor, afraid to alarm her, yet feeling that he must account for what he was doing. "It is by no means impossible that we—that you—may need defence if the country becomes more disturbed than it is at present; and it occurred to me that these heavy doors, with fastenings not known to the neighborhood, might be defended against numbers."

"No doubt," she replied, raising her eyebrows and smiling scornfully, "but there is really no cause for these nervous apprehensions, Mr. Surridge."

He crimsoned. He longed to tell her that he had no apprehensions for himself, but that he feared for her, for whom he would have given a thousand lives. But he could find no words. In Glorvina's presence he was always embarrassed and awkward.

"You have lived in Dublin all your life," she continued, seeing his confusion, "and are doubtless more alarmed than we country folk are at the occasional outbreaks of our fiery and passionate people; but, believe me, they will do us no harm. To use a Scotch proverb, 'Their bark is waur than their bite.'"

"But, Miss Desmond," stammered the tutor, "the papers teem with accounts of assassinations."

"More than half exaggerations and untruths," she interrupted. "I am quite aware that we run some risk from the national feeling for revenge; but I trust—nay, I believe, that when my countrymen know my guardian is helping Dan O'Rourke to defeat the evidence he is compelled to give against him, they will understand that we were injuring them against our will."

"But," he said, "news travels slowly to these western wilds, Miss Desmond, and it is difficult to remove prejudices from the minds of the peasantry. Believe me it is not cowardice, but common prudence, which induces me to take these precautions."

A perceptible sneer curled her beautiful lip.

"A very apprehensive prudence," she said. "Pray lay aside your nails and leave the old Priory doors as they are. We will not let any one hurt you."

It was too much. Shyness banished, and he burst forth:

"You insult me madam! It was from no cowardly fear for my own safety that I acted, but for yours, and for the helpless wife and children of Mr. Coghlan, who—say what you will of Whiteboy chivalry—are in deadly peril. But be it as you will;" and he threw down the screw driver. "I will obey you, and leave the other doors untouched."

He made her a grave and profound bow and walked away. She stood for a moment, stunned. This haughty man, the mute, shy tutor! It was marvellous!

And then a pretty smile stole over her features. She picked up the screw-driver and looked at it, weighed it in her hand, and laid it down gently. Then she gathered up the iron bar, and put it in a corner of the room, went back and gazed at the neatly fixed staples, and with another smile, left the north wing, closing the doors after her.

CHAPTER VIII.

That evening the tutor did not join the family; he was writing letters in the schoolroom; and they missed him. Of late he had often read aloud to them, and he read remarkably well. And now there was actually a new novel by the "Great Unknown" which he had begun the previous evening, and which Mrs. Coghlan would not have read without him. Glorvina was especially vexed. He had been almost perfectly silent during dinner, replying only when he was spoken to, and he had not appeared since; and she knew that she had cruelly wounded him. Her generous nature awoke, and she felt the keenest remorse for the insult she had offered to him. She could not sleep that night for thinking of her now-repented fault.

The next morning she was early in the study, where family prayers were always read. The tutor and Teddy were already there. She advanced at once with extended hand.

"Mr. Surridge," she said frankly, "I beg your pardon for my unprovoked impertinence yesterday. I was not really in earnest."

He was crimson, he stammered, and she could make nothing of his answer; but she understood the trembling hand that grasped her own.

"What did you do? How very you naughty, Glory?" asked Teddy, hanging round her. "Tell me—what does it mean?"

"Only that your Glory was a cross ill-natured girl; but, you see, Mr. Surridge has forgiven me." And a smile of exquisite sweetness irradiated her beautiful face.

The tutor's voice was full of feeling that morning as he read the prayers; and Glorvina secretly acknowledged that there was a great charm about this shy awkward man, who won respect from all, in spite of every drawback.

That day, after early dinner—which they always had when the master of the house was away—the tutor sat down to his books, his usual occupation, while Teddy was off to walk or play with Norah, when a knock came at the door. His "Come in" was answered by the appearance of Miss Desmond. He rose, surprised.

"Mr. Surridge," she said smiling, "I shall not think myself forgiven unless you continue your wise task of yesterday. I shall know if you have quite forgiven me by your resuming your work and letting me help you."

What could he do, but yield a rapturous humble assent? And together they hastened to the north rooms.

"These are dismal chambers indeed," said Glorvina, as they passed through them, "and are said to be haunted."

"So Teddy told me. Who or what is the ghost?" he asked smiling.

"The murdered wife of Feargus Coghlan, who lived three hundred years ago. He killed her in a fit of jealousy, and she has become the family banshee." She turned a little pale as she spoke. "Do you know Mr. Surridge," she went on, "I have seen her."

"You mean the other night?" he asked.

"Ah, you have heard! Well, I did; and let my guardian say what he will, I believe it was a real banshee that appeared to me. The churchyard walls are high. No one could have entered by the gate, which is opposite to the porch, without our seeing him, for Tim O'Brien was watching it. The figure rose suddenly before me from the monument of that very Feargus of whom I spoke to you. I could see the moonlight through its hand. Its voice was an awful whisper, like the wind sighing at midnight."

"And the face? he asked.

"It was veiled thickly; but the awful eyes gleamed through at me."

She shuddered again.

"I do not believe—I never can believe—in such appearances, Irishman as I am!" said the tutor gently. "Believe me, it was a despairing effort of some of the O'Rourkes. The pretended ghost may have been concealed in the churchyard before we went there. The monument—I know the great pile you mean—may have easily concealed her or him."

"But how could any one know that we were going to sow hemp-seed that night?"

"Has it never been done here before?" he asked.

"Never," she replied.

"But Norah may have heard you say that you would engage in the games and reported it in her nursery; and then what more likely than the hemp-seed sowing?"

"I don't think she did. No," she continued after a pause. "The banshee also told me my future fate, Mr. Surridge. If the warning it gave me comes true, I shall believe the whole will."

"Let me implore you not to take such an idea into your mind," he said earnestly; "the belief in predictions is too apt to lead to their fulfilment."

She laughed a little mischievously.

"Well, if the prediction were fulfilled," she said, "it would do no harm. It was only that I should marry the bravest man I had ever seen."

The tutor made no reply. He had now resumed his work. Glorvina, drawing a faded tabouret to his side, insisted on handing him the screws. She could not do too much to atone for her unkind jeer. So, quite thoughtless of the harm she was inflicting in another manner, she sat and laughed and chatted with all the animation of her Irish nature; and by degrees the tutor ceased to be shy, and talked to her very much at his ease.

At last the ninth door had staples affixed to it and all was done. Glorvina looked round merrily, though they were in the haunted chamber.

"Now," she said, "the fortress is ready for defence. But seriously I think one would be rather like a rat in a trap in it, for one couldn't get out."

"There is a window."

"But look at the descent. Who would dare it?"

"A brave man would," he replied.

"My future husband perhaps," she said jestingly.

This is the end of the portion omitted in our issue of May 6. Our readers will now take up the story from that date.*

"But he looks little. And why do you call him so? Surely you can't ——" pausing with sudden wonder.

"Oh pray don't be so mysterious, Eva! What is it you want to say?" demanded Glorvina impatiently.

"I only meant to tell you that I think it unkind of you to flirt with that poor little man" an impatient gesture again from Glorvina—"I do indeed! Why, to-night, as he was singing, I noticed his eyes when I went past the harp, and he was looking at you—unseen as he thought—as if he worshipped you."

"What if he does?" demanded Glorvina.

"My dear, how cruel! Surely Glory, you cannot find pleasure in making another person unhappy! And that is what you will do with this poor young man and his hopeless love!"

"Nonsense, Eva! you have nothing but love in your head ever since you have known Captain Leicester."

"I won't say a word more to you," she said tartly. "I have warned you, and now, if you break that man's heart, you will have to answer for it to your conscience."

"'Men have died, and worms have eaten them, but not for love,'" quoted Glorvina, and, pinching Eva's ear, she kissed her and went to her own room. There she sat down and sank into a reverie.

Is it true? Does he love me?" she murmured half aloud. "I think he does. Yet it is too absurd. I who have always been so ambitious! No, I must look up to my husband with admiration and reverence. This poor young fellow is not to be thought of. Well, then, I suppose I ought to be careful and keep out of his way. But he interests me; he is good, true, strangely simple and unworldly. Heigh-ho!"

As she rose with a sigh, she was startled by a loud unearthly yell, which seemed to come from just outside her window. Glorvina, though superstitious, was brave. She rushed instantly to the lattice and put back the curtains, but saw nothing; then she opened the casement and looked out. There was no one visible. The moon was up, a clear, brilliant fall moon, which revealed the whole lawn beneath, but there was no human being visible.

"The banshee, I suppose," she muttered as she closed the window. "Shall I go and tell Eva? Yet no; she could do nothing. Perhaps she heard it. Ah, here she is!"—as a knock came to the door. And, opening it, she found Eva outside.

"Glory, did you hear that noise?" she asked uneasily.

"Yes, it sounded awful; did it not?"

"What could it be—the banshee?"

—"I hope so really," replied Glorvina; "for it at least won't do us any bodily harm."

"Glory, may I sleep with you?" asked Eva.

"I get so nervous at night now. I wish papa were home. There is nobody but old Murphy and the tutor if any of the Whiteboys came."

"Mr. Surridge could defend us, I am sure," said Glorvina.

"That slight man! Why, he would be of no use at all! Teddy could help as much."

"Well you can stop with me," said Glorvina. "So don't be afraid any longer. I assure you I am equal to contend with any banshee."

SPOILING HIS LOGIC.

Here is a ludicrous instance of "speaking out in meeting," which transpired in a small parish in the South of Scotland:

The good old preacher—an earnest, simple-minded man, who regarded his flock as a gathering of children of large growth—was holding forth upon the story of Jonah; and, in approaching the climax, he indulged in a bit of rhetorical flourish, to the following effect:

"And what kind of a fish was it, my breathern, that God had appointed thus to execute His holy will? was it a shark, my breathern? No, ti could not be a shark, for God would in ever have given the tender flesh of His beloved prophet to be torn by the terrible teeth of that voracious monster. What fish was it then, my brethern? Was it a salmon, think you? Ah no, That were not possible. There's no salmon in the deepest pool of the Tweed could swallow a man. Besides, you ken, it's mair natural for a man to swallow salmon than for salmon to swallow man. What, then, was it? Was it a sea-lion, or a sea-horse? Or was it a sea-dog, or a great rhinoceros? Ah, no. Those are not Scripture beasts, ava. Ye're as far aff't as ever. Which of the monsters o' that great deep was it, can you tell me, that swallowed him?

At this point an aged dame, who had been sitting on nettles, believing her minister to be really at a loss—thinking he had forgotten the name of the fish—as he raised his hand, and took a survey of his audience, previous to capping the climax, knocked him from his bias by crying out:

"Hoot, sir! it was a whale you ken!"

The minister gasped for breath, and looked daggers.

"Out upon ye, for the graceless old wife that you are, thus to tak' the words out o' the mouth o' God's minister! You've just cut in and tumbled the beautiful fabric o' logical sequence all to pieces!'

"Aweel," muttered the ancient dame, with a firm closing of her jaws, "I dinna care for that. It wer' a whale ony way!"

The whale which has been on exhibition in various places has just been embalmed Cleveland by a secret process which is expected to preserve the huge creature for an indefinite peroid of time. The operation required the services of three Cleveland butchers, who consented to play the role of Jonah in a manner and for a purpose which that performer never contemplated when he created the part. They descended into the whale's stomach and cut away superfluous portions of the flesh and removed the entrails. Leviathan was then washed out as clean as a whistle from stem to stern preparatory to the embalming process.

HIS CONQUEST.

"See me 'mash' that pretty damsel," said a larky young man with the latest style of silk plug, to his friend on West Grand Street about 9 o'clock on Saturday evening. Quietly stepping up to the pretty damsel's side he lifted the aforesaid silk plug and remarked in winning tones: "Excuse me, my dear young lady, but it is rather late for you to be on the street unprotected; permit me to accompany you to your home." Instantly a broad face of sable hue was turned upon the insinuating interlocutor and between a set of gleaming ivories flashed the following: "Look a heah, young fellah, I doan want none o' yer lip; gim me a single word mo' o' yer sass an' I'll flop yer on yer back, do you heah?" Both young fellows [illegible] and gave up the "mash" with a [illegible] feeling [illegible].

HIS MODESTY.

The other night a policeman observed a man hanging around the enterance to a Michagan avenue hall in a queer sort of way, and he asked him if he belonged to the order then in session up stairs. The man replied that he did, and the officer inquired:

"Then why don't you go up?"

"Well, I was thinking about it."

"Haven't been expelled, have you?"

"Oh no."

"Aren't afraid of anybody?"

"No."

"And you hav'nt lost your interest?"

"I might as well tell you," said the man after beating around a while longer. "I went down to Toledo a few days ago, and somehow the story came back here that I was drowned. My lodge thereupon passed resolutions to the effect that I was honest, upright and liberal, and a shining ornament, and that what was its loss was my gain. I wasn't drowned, as you see, I kind o'hate to walk in on 'em and bust those resolutions. Iv'e tried it three times, and I can't get higher up than the fifth stair before I weaken."—Detroit Free Press

On Friday morning last the train from the north, due here about 8.40 a.m., run over a cow belonging to Mr. Geo. Bell. The animal, with a number of others, was on the crossing of the railway and second line, and although the engineer sounded an alarm whistle, the bovine stubbornly refused to move until struck by the approaching engine. After the accident, Mr. Stein, who is a neighbour of Mr. Bell's, came to the conclusion that the cow was his, and bemoaning his loss, he proceeded to look after the beef and hide. It appears that animal much resembling the one killed is owned by Mr. S., and it was impossible by examining the mulated carcase to tell to whom it belonged, and it was only when the cattle came home in the evening that it was discovered that Mr. B. was the loser of the beef. The cow was valued at $40, and is a loss to her owner which he can ill afford.—Stayner Sun.

BABY IS DEAD.

"Baby is dead!"

Three little words passing along the line copied somewhere and soon forgotten. But, after all was quiet again I leaned my head on my hand and fell into a deep reverie of all that those words may mean.

Somewhere—a dainty form, still and cold, unclasped by mother's arms to-night. Eyes that yesterday were bright and blue as skys in June dropped to-night between white lids, that no voice can raise again.

The soft hands whos rose leaf fingers were wont to wander lovingly around mother's neck and face, loosely holding white buds, quietly folded in confined rest.

Soft lips, yesterday rippling with laughter, sweet as woodland brook falls, gay as a trill of a forest bird, to-night unresponsive to kiss or call of love.

A silent home—the patter of baby feet forever hushed—a cradle bed unpressed. Little shoes half-worn—dainty garments—shoulder knots of blue to match those of yesterday, folded with aching heart away.

A tiny mound, snow-covered in some quiet graveyard.

A mother's groping touch in uneasy slumber for the fair head that shall never rest upon her bosom. The low sob, the bitter tear, as broken dreams awaken to sad reality. The hopes of future years wrecked, like fair ships that suddenly go down within sight of land.

The watching of other babies, dimpled, healthy, laughing, strong, and this one gone; the present agony of grief, the future emptyness of heart, all held in those three little words, "Baby is dead!"

Indeed, it is well that we can cope and soon forget the words so freighted with woe to those who receive and send them. And yet it cannot harm us now and then to give a tender thought to those for whom our careless pen stroke is preparing such a weight of grief.

WANTED.—A number of papers are inserting the following advertisement without charge:—"Wanted—About seventy-nine young men, of all shapes and sizes, from the tall, graceful dandy, with the baseball moustache (nine on a side,) down to the little hump backed, carrotyheaded, weazel-eyed upstart. The object is to form a gaping corps to be in attendance at the street corners, church corridors or vestibules, each Sunday, during the comming summer, before and after divine service, to stare at the females and to make delicate and gentlemanly remarks on their person and dress. All who wish to enlist in the above corps, will appear at the various street corners next Sunday both morning and evening, when they will be duly inspected, and their names, personal appearance, and quantity of brains, registered in a book, kept for that purpose, and to be published. To prevent a general rush, it will be as well to state that none will be enlisted possessing intellectual capacity, superior to that of a well-bred donkey."

Detroit Free Press: You won't find a Canadian fooling around with paste or mucilage to make a postage stamp stick. He sits down and sews the blame thing on.

[illegible] the interest [illegible] the editor [illegible] young man, [illegible] whom he had just engaged as assistant. Before leaving he [illegible] the ambitious young editor not to omit any chance to go unimproved to force the paper and its very low subscription price upon the attention of the public.

"Always keep before your mind the fact that the object of this paper is to extend its circulation," he said, "and whenever you see a chance put in a puff on the Herald in any notice you may make, pile it as thick as you can. Keep the people stirred up all the time, you understand, so that they will believe that our paper is the greatest in the United States."

The parting tear was shed, and the editor left. The following night, while he was far away from home, his wife died very suddenly. Upon the assistant developed the unpleasant duty of announcing the sad intelligence to the public. He did as follows:

GONE, BUT NOT FORGOTTEN.

"We are compelled, this morning, to preform a duty which is peculiarly painful to the able assistant editor, who has been engaged on this paper at an enormous expense, in accordance with our determination to make the Herald a first class journal. Last night, death suddenly and unexpectedly snatched away from her domestic hearts (the best are advertised under the head of Stoves and Furnaces upon our first page), Mrs. Agatha Burns, wife of Rufus P. Burns, the gentlemanly editor of the Herald. Terms, three dolars a year, invariable in advance. A kind mother, and an exemplary wife. Office over Coleman's grocery, up two flight of stairs. Knock hard. 'We shall miss thee, mother, we shall miss thee.' Job printing solicited. Funeral at half-past four, from the house just across the street from the Herald office. Gone to be an angel now. Advertisments inserted for ten cents a square."

Well, the editor arrived home that day, at noon. Slowely and sadly he was observed to arm himself with a double barreled following piece, into which he inserted two pounds and a half of bullets. He marched over to the office followed by an immense crowd. The assistant editor was busy at the time, painting a placard to be tacked on the hearse. It bore the legend: "By your coffins of Simms, over the Herald office." The assistant cast his eyes around, and preceived his chief. Care was set upon that wan cheek, and thunder clothed his brow. He leveled his gun. The assistant did not wait. With one wild and awful yell, he jumped from the second story, and struck out for the golden shores of the Pacific. It is believed that he eventually swam over to China. But there is only one editor now, and the clerk in the office has standing orders to blow out the brains of any man who brings any obituary notice to the paper.

EPITAFFY

Sometimes a pun or play on the name is introduced such as on the epitaph of John White:

Here lies John a shining light'
Whose name, life, actions, all were White.

The following was rather epigrammatic than epitaphic, in regard to the Rev. John Chest:

Beneath this spot lies buried
One chest without another,
The outer chest was all that's good:
Who says so of the other?

William Wilton, buried in Lambeth, certainly did not write the epitaph which bears relation to him:

Here lyeth W.W.,
Who never more will trouble, trouble you.

Nor, we may safely say, did Owen Moore pen the following:

Owen Moore is gone away.
Owin' more than he could pay.

More likely to be genuine are these epitaphy which involve a bit of bad logic, syntax, or grammar in their composition. In a graveyard at Montrose is said to be the following:

Here lies the bodies of George
Young and all their posterity
For fifty years backwards.

And in Wrexham churchyard as follows:

Here lies five babies and children dear,
Three at Oswestry and two here.

Akin to this in logical blundering is:

Here lies the remains of Thomas Milsom, who died in Philadelphia, Marh, 1758;
Had he lived he would have
Been buried here.

And another at Nettlebed, in Oxfordshire:

Here lies Father and Mother and Sister and I;
We all died within the space of one short year;
We be all buried at Wimble, except I.
And I be buried here.

Lord Byron is credited with an epitaph on an old neighbour of his, near Newstead:

John Adams lies here, of the Parish Southwell,
A carrier, who carried his can to his mouth well
He carried so much and carried so fast.
He could carry no more, so was carried at last,
For the liquor he drank, being to much for one,
He could not carry off, so he's carrion.

When the celebrated Gen. Wolfe died a premium was offered for the best written epitaph on the brave officer. A number of poets of all descriptions entered the competition, and among the rest was one who addressed his communication to the editor of the Public Ledger, as follows:

He marched without dread or fears
At the head of his bold grenadiers;
And what was more remarkable—nay, very particular,
He climbed up rocks that were quite perpendicular.

"My dear," said a smiling spouse to her other half, a morning or two since, "I'm going a shopping; I want a little change." "Pooh!" responded the ungallant man, "that would be no change at all, you go shopping every day."

One landlady, innocent of grammatical knowledge, advertises that she has "a fine airy, well-furnished bedroom for a gentle man twelve feet square;" another has "a cheap and desirable suit of rooms for a respectable family in good repair," still another has "a hall bedroom for a single woman 8x 12."

NOTICE.

THE Canada Advertising Agency, No. 29 King Street West, Toronto, W. W. BUTCHER, Manager, Is authorized to receive advertisements for this paper.

A SHOCKING ACCIDENT happened on the evening of the 24th inst. at London, Ontario. The Steamer Victoria was returning with an excursion party from a place called Springbank, when the boat suddenly, and without apparent cause, crumbled to pieces, precipitating all on board, some 600 human beings, into the water. At the present time of writing about 150 bodies had been recovered. It was impossible to tell with any certainty how many had perished. As the suddenness and awful nature of the calamity has naturally thrown every one in the city into the wildest state of horror and confusion, and it will be some days before the people will be sufficiently calm to find out who are missing. In several cases whole families have perished. It is stated by some that the cause of the accident was the over-crowding of the boat. A searching investigation should be made, and if the rumours prove true the government should interfere with a strong hand to prevent the inhuman wretches who, for the sake of a few dollars, will permit their boats to be so over-crowded as to endanger the lives of all on board.

Since the above was in type fuller returns have been received, and the list of the victims now reach 217. From the Toronto Mail we clip, in a condensed form,

THE STORY OF THE ACCIDENT

is clearly told by Mr. W. D. Eckert, head master of the London East public school. He says:—"The decks of the steamer were packed with people, principally ladies and children. I was on the upper deck during the passage, and shortly after leaving the dock at Springbank a good many passengers began keeping time with the listing of the steamer, and went as far as they could from side to side each time the vessel surged. Many people made fun of it at first, and a good deal of hallooing was done, such as, 'Get out your lifeboats,' etc. While this was proceeding up-stairs, the passengers on the lower deck were running to and fro endeavouring to keep their feet from getting wet, and fully fifteen inches of water ran from gangway to gangway across that portion of the boat. When she surged, the people below yelled and screamed in a terrible manner. Captain Rankin was at the wheel. While nearing the bend below the Cove bridge, probably two hundred yards west of it, a greater rush of the passengers than had hitherto been experienced took place, followed by a crackling noise. The women screamed, the children yelled, and for the moment the faces of several men in my vicinity turned ghastly pale. The scene was heightened by one man jumping overboard, and almost instantaneously after the posts which upheld the hurricane deck gave way in consequence of so many people holding on to them to save themselves from being swept overboard, and upon the heads of those beneath. All who could do so grabbed something to hold by, and very many were drawn into the water by their nearest neighbors. Those who could swim were prevented from doing so, first by the crash of the deck upon their heads, and, secondly, in consequence of the crowd of people who were huddled together underneath the lumber.—Then came a general crash, and the boat appeared to break up into several pieces, principally from stem to stern. The catastrophe was but the action of a few minutes. I was caught between two stanchions, and after floundering about in the water for a few moments, managed to free myself from the debris and swam to the shore. The shouting and calls for help were of the most heart-rending description. They lasted only a few minutes, however. One gentleman, whose name I do not know, swam to and from the wreck a dozen times or more and saved 14 or 15 people who had freed themselves from the floating timbers. Many of my pupils were on board. I have no hesitation in saying there were from 200 to 300 more passengers on the boat than there ought to have been. The excursionists, as a rule, generally take the boat home which leaves about half-past five, and that is the principal reason I fancy why the Victoria was overloaded."

For Ice Cream go to A. W. Eaton's Residence Brown St. opposite Dr. Sproules new residence.

If the joyus manner in which the anniversary of the natal day of our gracious Queen is any indication of loyalty, then Markdale must be put down as loyal to the core. From an early hour on Tuesday morning vehicles of all description came pouring into the village, and by noon, a pretty good crowd could be seen around the streets, Hotels, and other places, where eatables could be procured, and although the latter places were pretty numerous, it was after 2 before all appeared to have their appetites appeased after which they wended their way to the grounds where the athletic games and sports where to be held. Although the competitions were not very numerous, they were all first class, and the competitors for the various prizes were close and keen. The committee of management deserve greatcredit for their untiring exertions to make everything pass off smoothly and successfuly, which they succeeded. Below we give the prizelist, and we think some of the scores will compare favorably, with many places of much larger pretentions than the unassuming village of Markdale.

THE Neck-Tie Social announced for Friday evening, 20th inst., by the L. A. A., Presbyterian church here, was something new and rich, which financially and otherwise, proved a success beyond anticipation. The very fine evening and good roads brought out quite a number from the vicinity and neighboring village, who went home fully satisfied that they had spent a very enjoyable evening. The first thing on the programme was the Fish Pond, which seemed to be the chief attraction. After the Ties were all matched, and we must say, some of them very satisfactorily, the fishing commenced. Two good lines were provided, and for nearly an hour, were cast in the pond with wonderful rapidity. Some were fishing that evening that had not fished for years, young and old had a haul going home. The laugh occasioned by the above sport was worth the admission alone. After the fruit was passed round Man's Dread was introduced to the notice of those who wished to see it. Some of our young gents would not believe that such a small thing would be the dread of any man. 'Tis plainly seen they have not experienced it yet, or their opinions would be different. We hope none of the young ladies of Markdale will be compelled to resort to the use of such a dreadful little thing. The comical Reading of Messrs. McDaugal and Irwin met with hearty applause. The String Band was called on several times and did credit to the name. The proceeds, we understand, amounted to something over $22.

TEMPERANCE IN WILLIAMSFORD STATION.

At the regular meeting of Holland Centre Lodge, No. 223, United Temperance Order, held May 5th, the following were initiated as officers for the ensuing term:

President—Geo. Skene, re-elected.
Vice-Pres.—Jno. W. Bruce.
Sec.—Wm. Stevenson, re-elected.
Treas.—Sister M. A. Sargent.
Junior Counsellor—Sister C. Price.
Sen. Counsellor—Sister H. McKay.
Financier—Bro. R. Carter.
Recorder—Sister C. R. Sargent.
Marshal—Bro. P. McKennit.
Dep. Marshal—Sister R. Crowther.
Guard—Bro. W. Stevenson.
Past Pres.—Bro. A. J. Avison.

This Lodge, in spite of many difficulties and obstacles, is steadily advancing. It now numbers upwards of 40 members in good standing, new names are constantly being added to the roll, and many of the young people of this place, though surrounded by temptations in the shape of "grog shops," are earnest and faithful members and workers in the good cause.

Its regular meetings, which are held every Thursday evening in the Methodist Church (kindly granted by that body for the use of the Society), are well attended, and after the Lodge business is transacted, an instructive entertainment consisting of debates, readings, recitations, &c., is generally held, in which both officers and members alike energetically participate.

Socially and morally the Lodge is doing a good work, and its members have just reason to be pleased at the result of their efforts, in the noble work of reclaiming the drunkard and raise the fallen; and by their banding themselves together, forming a more effectual safe-guard against the coming approach of that stealthy and insidious vice, which has proved itself such a deadly enemy to the peace, happiness and prosperity of so many homes in our fair Dominion, and to so many homes even in our own village and neighboring country.

Yours, &c., B. W.

A MAN came up the street the other day seeking help to get his horses out of the swale below the tannery, the crossing is in such a bad condition that his team fell through the holes. The other roads in the neighborhood are in almost an impassable condition. What do we pay a council for if they do not look after the roads. If things remain as they are we might as well be without one altogether.

We have a new printing office here. They have a notice posted up in their office which reads as follows:—"NOTICE.—No loafers allowed." We have no loafers in our village, and I think he had better send that old foggy notice to where he brought it from.

The 24th passed off very quietly with us. The day was chiefly taken up with pic-nic parties, some going to Bruster's lake and others to Eugenia. the remainder stayed at home and walked in the Park.

An unusual aroma was discovered on Monday and people commenced searching around their stables and outbuildings to find out the cause, after a time it was ascertained to arise from a dead cow that had been left to rot in the sun. The question was asked why our city fathers, who are supposed to look after such matters, had permitted such a nuitance to exist; when lo and behold, it turned out that the cow had been the property of one of them and that another had drawn it there with his team.

The boys of our village are persecuting the sparrows very much. If our heavenly Father takes notice of one sparrow, what will he think of these boys who are committing wholesale slaughter among them. We warn them that if they don't desist, they will be apt to take an excursion to our county town.

Building is going on very extensively in the valley nearly every farmer that has not got a barn is building this summer.

The Queens Hotel is doing a rushing business, lots of Methodist preachers seeking repose and pleasure in wielding the fly for the unwary finny tribe. In short business is good all through the town (if you will allow the term). The saw mill & shingle mill are running to their full capacity, ten hours per diem. The blacksmith and waggon maker are doing quite a trade in new rigs, waggons, buggies & spring boards. We expect another blacksmith to start in a few weeks in the person of Horace Hurlburt. If the weather keeps fair till Sunday I will write again.

DUNDALK.

From a Correspondent.

A LACROSSE Match was played here on Friday afternoon the 20th inst., between the "Grays" of Shelburne and the "Garnetts" of Dundalk, which resulted in favor of the "Grays," they winning three straight games. The games throughout were closely contested, and kept up for a considerable length of time, and have no doubt that if both clubs devote more time to practice they will show a good record this season.

The concert in the evening under the directorship of Mr. Parsons was a decided success, and reflects credit to all parties who took part therein. The following programme was rendered which was heartily applauded:—Instrumental, by Mr. W. P. Rundell; Recitation, Bernardo Del Carpio, Mr. J. J. Crombie; Song, Castles in the Air, Miss Lamon; Duett, The Moonl't Sea, Misses Graham and Rundell; Cornet Solo, Mr. Ketchum; Dialogue, Troublesome Servant, Messrs. Shaw and Sutton; Song, Beautiful Day of the Past, Miss C. Phillips; Recitation, Mr. Black; Song, Little Farm well Tilled, Messrs. Symington, Atkinson, and Rundell—accompanied by Mrs. Atkinson on the organ; Recitation, Messrs. Strachan and Crombie; Duett, Cornet and Organ, Mr. and Mrs. Ketchum; Song, What are the Wild Waves saying, Mrs. Atkinson and Mr. Rundell; Song, Minute Gun at Sea, Mrs. Atkinson and Mrs. Gardner; Instrumental Duett, Musto Gallop, Miss Graham and Miss Rundell; Chorus Piney Woods, Mrs. Atkinson, Mrs. Gardner, Mr. Rundell and Mr. Symington. The Black Statue, Characters, Messrs. Atkinson, Shaw, Sutton, Crombie, Whitby, and McQuarrie. Proceeds, about twenty-five dollars.

THE TORONTO, GREY AND BRUCE ROAD.

It does not often happen that the Mail and Globe agree on any question, but after a good deal of floundering on the part of both they appear at last to have agreed upon what it is best to do with the Toronto Grey and Bruce railway. At one time they favored leasing it to the Grand Trunk at another they thought the Northern ought to get it and now they say it should be worked by the company as an independent road.

No doubt it would be a desirable thing if the company could hold and work the line. But, unfortunately for the company, that is the one thing it is not able to do. The money of the share and bondholders, of the municipalities and of the government, to the amount of $4,000,000, has been expended on construction and equipment. More money was needed for renewals and repairs, for changing the gauge, the paying off the floating debt arrears of interest on the bonds—but where was it to come from?

The municipal grant was $968,000, the bondholders advanced $1,783,464, and government gave a subsidy of $360 000. The municipalities and the government when appealed to refuse to give any further aid, and the bondholders were growing restless and urgent. Every project of the old board reorganizing the road and widning the gauge had failed, and then the control of the road and its affairs was handed over to the bondholders. This was in June of last year.

The new board re-opened negotiations with the municipalities, suggesting an arrangement by which the Grand Trunk might operate the line, if considered desirable in the interest of all parties. The directors believed that this could be accomplished, from interviews had with the general manager of the Grand Trunk, and at a convention of delegates from the municapalities the suggestion was approved. The scheme was to raise $1,000,000 by preference debenture stock and additional municipal aid, change the line to the standard gauge, re-lay it with steel rails, pay off its liabilities and arrange with the Grand Trunk to work it,

The terms of the proposed lease were rejected by Mr. Hickson as extravagant, but were accepted by the directors of his company in London, much to the surprise of everybody. Legislation was required, and a bill was introduce last session authorizing the Tronto, Grey and Bruce board to lease the road to any other railway company. But to this proposal vigorousobjections were urgedby en or twelve members whose constituents were interested in the road. They remembered that the Hamilton and Northwestern had recieved large bonuses from the municipalities on the understanding that it was to be a competiting line to the Northern, but that when it suited their purpose the directors of the former road handed it over to the latter. They were willing that the road should be leased to the Grand Trunk, but under no circumstances to the Northern partly because the lattar would be given monopoly of the trade of the northern and northwestern counties, and partly because it was not itself financially able to give a guarantee of operating the line. Finnaly it was agreed that the line might be leased to the Grand Trunk, or, with the assent of the governor in-council, to the Great Western or Northern.

Meantime the bondholders were making their arrangements for improving the track, and the prospects of the road were brightening every day. Capitalists no longer looked askance at the securities, but showed their confidence by offers of 96 for the new preference bonds. This was not because the business of the Tronto, Grey and Bruce was improved—for it was not—but simply and solely because it was about to pass into the hands of the Grand Trunk. Then Mr. Hendrie, of Hamilton, moved by a desire to benfit his own city and the Hamilton and Northwestern road, procured an offer from the Northern Company; hence all the present agitation.

This recitation of facts is necessary to show how the Toronto, Grey and Bruce came to possess any value in the eyes of railway men and capitalists. The municipalities when appealed to last year voted $85,000, and if the bondholders proposed to operate the road themselves their securities would go a begging in the market. If the Grand Trunk offer was withdrawn now their condition would be as helpless and hopeless as a year ago. It is consequently the sheerest folly to advise them—as the Globe and Mail are doing—to reject the offer of both the Grand Trunk and Northern and operate the road as an independient line.—Toronto World.

For all purposes of a family medicine HAGYARD'S YELLOW OIL will be found invaluable. Immediate relief will follow its use. It relieves pain, cures chilblains, frostbites, scalds burns, corns, rheumatism, neuralgia, &c., &c. For internal, use it is none the less wonderful. One or two doses frequently cure sore throat. It will cure croup in a few minutes. A few bottles has often cured asthma. Colic has been cured in fifteen minutes by a teaspoonful dose. It cures with the utmost rapidity. It is really a wonderful medicine.

COUNTY ITEMS.

Last Saturday evening we were visited by a severe storm of lightning and rain. Mr. James Sullivan, of the fifth con. Glenelg, had a calf struck by the lightning. It was paralyzed for about twenty-four hours, but strange to say, is now doing well.—Review.

The new Congregation of Knox Presbyterian Church held their first service in the Town Hall, on Sabbath last. A large congregation assembled both morning and evening, and listened very attentively to the discourse of Rev. Mr. Smith, who conducted the service.—Review.

THE catch of trout in this locality has been so far remarkably good, a fact that is visible on the radiant faces of the devotees of the piscatorial art. As an instance of this we might mention that, on Monday, Messrs. I. F. Belfry, F. A. Campbell, Thomas Jennings and J. McLachlan, went up to Reid's pond, in Melancthon, and caught about thirty dozen speckled trout. This is a true story.

On Thursday afternoon last, sparks from the chimney of the cabinet factory here, ignited the straw lying around an adjoining stable, which would soon have been in flames, if the fire had not been seen in time, and promptly extinguished. Fortunately there was no wind blowing at the time, if the fire had got fairly started, nothing could have prevented a disastrous conflagration. —Shelburne Free Press.

A STRANGE CASE.—A man named Crispin, of Brant Township, who has been living at Bay City for some time, recently returned and brought back a wife with him, who had been married to another man several years ago. On Friday last, the first husband made his appearance at the residence of Crispin, and demanded his wife and child; but she refused to go with him. We understand that he left again, and whether he will make any further effort to obtain the woman, is not known. Crispin and the woman have been living together for four or five years.—Post

CUTTING STAVES.—The Messrs Knechel employed a man to feed the machine for cutting staves, in their factory here and he went to work with great confidence having had some experience in the business. In a short time he got his fingers too close and lost a piece of one of them, he tied it up and and went on with his work as before but very soon the same thing happened again and the finger was nearly all taken off. This obliged him to give up. Having no one else that was able or willing to do this work, Mr. P. Knechtel went at it himself and cut the whole stock of stave bolts, without meeting with a scratch. The work is exceedingly difficult and dangerous and very few men can be found willing to engage in it. As a rule, it will be found that stave cutters are short of some of their fingers, and perhaps a hand.—Post.

APHORISMS ON THE CULTURE OF CHILDREN.

BY DR. P. H. CHAVASSE, F.R.C.S., ETC., ENGLAND.

'None has yet penetrated into the mystery of a mother's influence over her child. Science is beginning to show how all important is this influence before birth, but science has not yet found out what germs of character are earliest developed and fostered by the magnetism of a mother's love, in its direct bearing on the physical and mental growth.

'A little child can only judge of you by your action. It is no use preaching at or to him. Your actions toward him speak more volubly, forcibly and effectually than words.

'Boys ought never to be allowed to sleep with (female) servants. Many a pure, innocent boy has had his body weakened and his mind corrupted for life by this practice being allowed.

'When a child is unusually naughty and cross, the chances are that he is not well......Let him have a run and a romp out of doors, and, if possible, in the green fields.

'Never deceive your child. If you once do, he will never believe you again; and mischief will be done which years will not repair.

'The best physicians for many complaints are—Dr. Diet, Dr. Quiet, and Dr. Merryman:—diet, rest and cheerfulness.

'Every child ought to have his flower garden—a plot of ground that he might call his own—that he might, to his heart's content, dig and delve, plant and sow.

'A quacking mother (one who is always dosing her children) is a misfortune to her child, and makes plenty of work for the doctors.

'Some mothers deserve a whipping more than do their children; she having encouraged a fault by bad management, is the real offender.

Temperance, early rising and sponging the whole of the body every morning, either with tepid or cold, are preventives of cold, provocatives of health, helps to longevity and sharpeners of the intellect. "The method by which," says Sir Astley Cooper, "I preserve my own health, are temperance, early rising and sponging the body every morning with cold water immediately after getting out of bed, a practice which I have adopted for thirty years, and although I go from the hot theatre into the wards of the hospital on the severest winter nights with merely silk stockings on my legs, I scarcely ever had a cold.'—Canada Health Journal.

A correspondent from Euphrasia informs us that parties are in the habit in his neighborhood of desecrating the Sabbath by fishing ... He also wishes us to inform those concerned that he intends prosecuting all whom he may find so engaged after this date. A word to the wise should be sufficient.

As a health renewer Burdock Blood Bitters acts like a charm. In Malarious, Bilious Complaints, Scrofula and disorders of the Blood, Liver and Kidneys, this great combination of vegetable Medicines proves a certain specific. A few doses regulate the bowels and as a restorative Tonic it has no equal. Trial Bottles 10 cents.

Mr. James Chapman, of our town, was on Saturday last brought before Messrs. Brown, Elliott, Struthers and Richardson, J. P's., on a charge of larceny and housebreaking, made by Mr. Nelson Laird, of Artemesia, and after hearing the evidence the case was dismissed with costs. Mr. D. J. McMillan appeared for the defence.

The want of a hearse has long been felt in Markdale, but that is no longer the case, as will be seen by reference to our advertising columns. Mr. R. Askin, who recently bought out Mr. George Wright's furniture establishment, has supplied the want.

Mr Benson is making preparations to rebuild and will erect a much larger building than the old one, he intends making a solid front with the Reid & McDougal block making a frontage of 128 feet in all.

We learn that one of the players for the jig dancing competition on the grounds on the 24th, got into serious trouble by so doing. It may be judged how he fared when his little boy was heard to ask his mother what made his pa's whiskers thinner on one side than they were on the other.

Mrs. Morgan—I am very much pleased with the Switch and Puffs you made for me, and take pleasure in recommending you to any one desiring work in your line.
Mrs. C. W. Rutledge.
Markdale, May 23rd, 1881.

Burdock Blood Bitters is not a Whiskey Stimulant or fancy drink to pander to the depraved appetite of the intemperate, but a pure vegetable life-giving Tonic and regulator of the Secretions. It acts promptly on the Bowels, the Liver, the Blood and the Kidneys, purifying and giving tone to the entire system. Try a Sample Bottle which costs only 10 Cents Large Bottles $1.00.

It appears that the murderers of the Donnelly family are likely to be brought up again, the brothers Feely having made a confession fully corroborating little Johnny O'Connor's evidence. As far as can be learned the parties most interested appear to labor under no apprehension as to the final result should they again be brought to trial, as they feel confident that no jury will convict them on the Feeley's evidence. Time alone will prove if their surmises are correct.

The proprietor of BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS challenges the world to produce the record of a medicine that has achieved a more wonderful success, or better credentials in so short a period of time as has this great BloodPurifier and System Renovator. Its cures are the marvels of the age. Sample Bottles 10 cents.

The people of Markham were recently greatly startled at the discovery of a large quantity of human remains, and all sorts of rumours and conjectures were indulged in. There were about 500 skulls dug up besides other portions of bones belonging to the human body. Professor Wilson, of Toronto, went down to investigate and came to the conclusion that they were the remains of Indians and must have been in the ground fully 800 years.

Personal.—It is with pleasure that we announce the return of Mr. A. Speers, jr., from the North-West Territory, whither he went last fall to pursue his occupation of droving. It is unnecessary for us to make any further remarks than that Mr Speers intends resuming business here, as the entire farming community know the generous treatment they have received at the hands of that gentleman while associated with his brothers in the past. Mr. S. speaks in glowing terms of the North-West, and believes it is destined to lead in our Dominion as an agricultural country before another five years passes over us.

An honest medicine is the noblest work of man- and their is no remedy that is more justly meritorious in curing the ills that flesh is heir to' than Burdock Blood Bitters, the Great Blood Purifier and System Renovator. It cures Liver Complaint, Dyspepsia, Scrofula, Kidney, Complaints, and all troubles arising from impure blood, constipated bowels or disordered secretions, and the best Nervine and Tonic in the world.

Shocking Death.—Mrs. Thomas Boyd, Holland Township, about six miles from here, came to her death on Monday evening the 23rd inst., in a most heartrending manner. She started a little fire in front of the house in order to drive the misquitoes away with the smoke. It appears her dress caught fire, and she being very feeble (being 79 years of age) was unable to make sufficient exertion to extinguish the fire and perished before assistance came. Her husband was not more than half an hour from the house and when he returned found to his horror his wife quite dead. Mrs. Boyd was much respected and had made many warm friends in the Township of Holland, where she had long been a resident. Mr. Boyd has the deepest sympathy of the neighborhhod in his sad bereavement.

Neither the syndicate, the Scott Act, or the Irish question cause half the sensational comment, that is caused by the popularity of BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS. This great remedy is marvellous in its success in curing Chronic disease when other medicines have failed. It is the best Blood Purifying Tonic and Liver Invigorator known. A specific for all diseases of Blood, Liver and Kidneys. Sample Bottles 10 cents.

The Fair :—on Tuesday last the usual Monthly Fair was held. The number of Cattle offered was not very large, but very good animals were disposed of. Mr. Wm. Irvine of Bentinck sold a three year old steer which weighed 1590 lbs. for $72. Mr. James Edge sold another that weighed over 1600 lbs. A number of milch cows were also offered. The attendance of people was not very large, and the fair was over at an early hour.—Review.

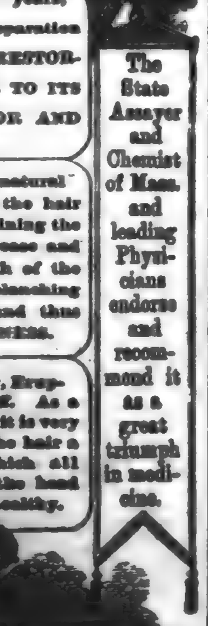
HALL'S VEGETABLE SICILIAN HAIR RENEWER



Has been in constant use by the public for over twenty years, and is the best preparation ever invented for RESTORING GRAY HAIR TO ITS YOUTHFUL COLOR AND LIFE.

It supplies the natural food and color to the hair glands without staining the skin. It will increase and thicken the growth of the hair, prevent its blanching and falling off, and thus AVERT BALDNESS.

ROBERT DUNLOP, Clerk.

If the Scriptures are to be quoted they must be weil and truthfully quoted or they are liable to do more harm than good to the quoter. Senator Hoar, of Massachusetts, discovered this when in behalf of the Chinese he quoted St. Paul's declarat on: "For God hath made of one blood all nations of the earth." "Go on—quot the remainder of the sentance." "There is no more of it," said Hoar. "Oh, yes there is," rejoined General Miller, "for the Apostle Paul said in addition to the words which the Senator has quoted, 'and hath determined the bounds of his habitations.' This was greeted by the Senate with peals of laughter, overwhelming the Massachusetts Senator with confusion. He questioned the accuracy of the quotation, and Miller producing a copy, read the whole passage.

THE RAILWAY.— We hear the whistle of the railway almost every day in Durham. On Tuesday last a train brought up a large quantity of freight for different parties in Town, and we understand that freight will be brought regularly from the present time. Ballasting is being proceeded with as rapidly as possible with one gravel train, and in a week or two regular trains will be run.—Review.

SINGULAR HAIL STORM.—Yesterday (Wednesday) Durham was visited by a rather singular Thunder storm. About half-past two o'clock it commenced raining. Just when it commenced a few hailstones fell of rather a large size, followed by a large down pour of rain without hail, which lasted only a few minutes, but just as it ceased, and as the thin edge of the cloud appeared to be right over Durham, and very high up, a quantity of hailstones fell of an extraordinary size and shape. Some of the stones were more than an inch across and of an irregular shape. Some clear as glass while others were opaque and white, and some were in the shape of a potatoe with four or five small ones attached. We picked up seven which completely cover-ed the palm of the hand, and no two alike. There was no wind the time the large hail fell. We did not hear of any damage being done.—Review.

R. J. SPROULE'S

GREAT ANNUAL

CLEARIG SALE,

AT THE

POST OFFICE STORE,

FLESHERTON.

In order to make room for heavy Spring Importations now arriving daily, I have decided reducing my present large and well selected and assorted stock of

GENAERAL DRY GOODS, FURS, MILLIERY,

Ready-Made Clothing,

BOOTS AND SHOES,

Hats, Caps and Groceries

TO THE LOWEST POINT POSSIBLE,

and in order to do so,

Will Sell at and Under COST,

FOR THE NEXT THIRTY DAYS.

The stock is all new, well bought, and well worth the attention of the closet buyers.

In GROCERIES you will find evrything of First-Class Value.

As I do not pursue the course of some of our windy Merchants of our neighboring Villages, of sending out numerous samples of cheap trash (with unscrupulous recommendations) outside our natural business relations, in order to impress the public that they are not properly treated by their more honorable dealers, and draw custom from the many.

You will find everything that I sell just as I represent it, and as good value as you can possibly get for your money anywhere, as I have always held that honorable dealing is the only true course for a business man.

My Groceries are all bought for strictly nett cash, consequently I can and will sell at

The Lowest Possible Prices!

For CASH and FARM PRODUCE

BUT NOT FOR CREDIT.

I have also in stock and for sale, a large quantity of

PURE SEED GRAIN!

Such as White Russian, Glasgow, Red Chaff, and other varieties of Spring wheat. Also Pure Clean Peas, Oats and Barley. Prime Timothy and Clover Seed; also Fresh Garden Seeds, and as it pays each and every Farmer to sow clean seed, you will make money by paying a few cents extra, and purchasing a good article.

I am now selling large quantities of

COARSE LAND SALT,

FOR MANURE,

Which will pay every Farmer Five Dollers for every one invested in it, and as I am anxious that every Farmer in this locality and neighboring Townships shall try it, have decided in selling in five and ten barrel lots at the Lowest Cash Price laid down by the car [illegible] bought for nett cash at Bottom Prices.

I would also intimate that my

HOUSE CLEANING.

I hear the carpet-beater's stroke,
I see the dusty carpet smoke,
I hear the swash of brush and pail,
And soap-suds taint the summer gale.

The front piazza open spreads
A view of chairs and feather beds;
While on the line hang coats and pants,
[illegible]

Through open windows, robbed of sash,
The crazy curtains flap and lash;
The chamber window sports a dress—
[illegible]

High o'er the din a woman's voice
In merry cadence doth rejoice,
Bare-armed, dishevelled, 'midst the noise—
Behold the [illegible] of our joys!

Thrice happy then the chap who can
Be gone a week "to see a man;"
Nor prematurely homeward hie,
But give the whitewash time to dry.

"O woman! in our hours of ease,"
We never dreamed of pranks like these;
The cleaning spells have come, no doubt,
E'er since Eve cleaned old Adam out.

SPRING SPORTS.

Now digs the boy the garden plot,
With energy intense,
Until he bags a tribe of worms,
And then he skips the fence.

Then off he skoots to where the stream
Doth very gently swish;
And with much patience, and his hooks,
Enticeth sundry fish.

And then with slow and weary steps,
Homeward doth he wend—
And he is led to a back shed,
And frightful cries ascend.

IN THE MIDST OF PERIL.

CHAPTER. X.

Others besides the young girls had heard the banshee-cry, and were alarmed at it. The servants talked of it next day with bated breath. Mrs. Coghlan was puzzled and uneasy.

James Surridge alone read it rightly. He was convinced that these strange incidents pointed to an endeavour by some of the people to warn the members of the family of approaching danger. Glorvina was very popular with the peasantry, as a sympathiser with their cause; and Mrs. Coghlan and Eva were beloved for many acts of kindness. Probably Mr. Coghlan himself, the clergyman thought, was not personally disliked, though the fanatic rebels might mean to startle other magistrates by his fate. He was confirmed in his opinion next morning during his walk with Teddy. They met Kathleen, who, having perceived that the boy had run on with his hoop out of hearing, turned back and said to Mr. Surridge—

"If you plaze, sorr, may I spake wid ye?"

"Surely, Kathleen. Is there anything I can do for you?"

"No sorr, it's not for meself I would spake. But, oh, there's terrible anger about, sorr, 'cos of the boys as is to suffer next week at Dublin! And it's wishin' I am that the family was away! Indade, sorr, it would be better if ye'd take a holiday for a bit yerself."

"Would you have me forsake my friends in peril, Kathleen?" he asked reproachfully. "Surely that is not what you would do?"

"I hope not, sorr; but I haven't the bold heart you have. And it would be death to anyone who took the part of those the boys had sintenced."

"But, Kathleen, this is all very wicked. Those who know murder is about to be committed and do not warn the victims are almost equally guilty with the murderers, and run a risk of sharing their fate in the end."

"But it's not murder at all, at all, I'm not spaking of," she retorted angrily. "only justice, sorr! And, if folks can't get it, they'll take it!"—and she was passing on, but Surridge took hold of her arm.

"Stay," he said. "In return for the life I gave you, Kathleen, tell me if any immediate danger beyond the risk every one now runs in this unhappy country is hanging over the Priory!"

"It's not to the likes of me they would tell it if there was," she replied. "And if they had, it isn't Kathleen who would betray a trust. But I've eyes and ears, and I tell you, sorr, that you and Miss Glorvina to had better get out of the Priory before Mr. Coghlan returns." And, snatching up her pail, she walked away.

"It is just as I feared—Heaven help us!" sighed the tutor rather hopelessly; for that morning there had come a letter from Mr. Coghlan announcing his speedy return, but not a word in it of any intention to remove his family to a safer home.

He had been, he said, unable to save O'Rourke's life by getting a pardon, but he had seen the man and received his forgiveness, and even his thanks for what he and Miss Desmond had done for him and promised for his family.

"His wife was with him," he added, "and was also grateful. The priest has convinced O'Rourke of his guilt, and the man is very penitent. I think, after this reconciliation with the condemned man himself, we need fear no revenge from the people. I shall not wait over the execution now, but be with you on Thursday next."

It was Tuesday now; on Thursday Mr. Coghlan would be home; on Friday O'Rourke would suffer. The tutor wished that Mr. Coghlan, if he would not remove his family, had at least remained over the execution, and till the feeling against him had somewhat passed away. But Coghlan was a wrong-headed, reckless man, though honourable and tender-hearted.

* * * * * * * * * * * *

On Thursday evening the Squire came home, grave, and yet glad to see his family again. He thanked the tutor for his care and attention; and James Surridge, when alone with him again, pressed on him the advisability of the family's going to Dublin for a time. But Mr. Coghlan persisted in his opinion that all danger was over.

"The threats," he said, "were made to save O'Rourke; but, now that he is sentenced and as good as dead, they will not annoy us again."

There was a good deal of gloom hanging over the family the next day. It was Dan O'Rourke's death-day, and there are few who would not be affected, at even involuntarily, causing a man to suffer the last penalty of the law.

They were all glad when Tim O'Brien came into dinner, and cheered them by his own unusually boisterous spirits. So wild at times did his glee appear during the meal, that Glorvina more than once looked at him with a fear that he had been drinking.

After dinner however, when he joined them in the drawing-room, his exuberant gaiety seemed to have deserted him. He sat quiet, answering occasionally at random, and sometimes appearing to be listening, Glorvina thought.

The girls had seated themselves at work at a small table near the fire; the children were playing on the hearthrug with a puzzle their father had brought them. Mr. Coghlan proposed a game of whist with his wife, Tim and the tutor. The card-table was drawn forward, and they had just taken their seats at it, when there was the report of a gun and a crash of glass; for a shot, striking the pier-glass, had shivered it.

There was a loud cry from the startled women. The tutor, springing up, rushed to the window and instantly closed and barred the shutters.

Happily no one was hurt, though, had not Mr. Coghlan happened at that moment to have bent forward over the table, the shot must have gone through his head. The family looked at each other in stunned alarm. Then little Norah burst into a violent fit of crying, and Eva clasped her arms around her father's neck. The tutor turned back and approached Glorvina.

"Take them all to the north rooms, Miss Desmond," he said, "and secure yourselves; I will ring the alarm;" and he snatched up a candle from the table and left the room.

Mrs. Coghlan rang the bell violently. The servants, already alarmed by the report of the gun, thronged in, looking pale and scared, while Glorvina whispered a few brief sentences to her guardian.

"An admirable thought!" he answered. "We will go at once."

"Where—what?" asked O'Brien eagerly.

"Into hiding," said his host drily. "Be so good as to take care of my wife, and lead her up-stairs."

"But surely," exclaimed Tim, "we men will not hide! Let the ladies do so by all means; but we must try a few shots with the rebels."

"My good fellow," replied Coglan, "I neither wish to kill nor be killed. A man's blood is a heavy weight on the soul. Lead Mrs. Coghlan to the north rooms. Murphy are all the doors and windows secured?"

"Yes, sorr," replied the trembling servant "Mr. Surridge sees them all fastened himself at dusk every night."

"Yet the shutters of that window"—pointing to it—"are not closed."

"But, sorr, I fastened them with my own hands," declared the man.

"Oh, never mind, don't dispute about it!" cried Glorvina impatiently. "Make haste up-stairs."

The tutor had hurried to the bell-tower, which was opposite to the bachelors' turret. The rope from it hung in an empty room opening upon the south corridor, where the family slept; but it was hooked up out of Teddy's reach, lest in a fit of mischief he should alarm the neighborhood.

The tutor uncoiled it and pulled it with all his strength; there came only a faint sound as from a feeble stroke. Surprised, he renewed his effort with greater force. The rope yielded to his hand this time, and came clattering to his feet. Greatly surprised and dismayed, he held the fallen end to the candle, and perceived that it had been cut through, except one strand, which was frayed and torn by the recent pull. The strand left had sufficed to support it until a strong pull brought it down. They were betrayed! No call for help could be given. The tutor, with a sigh of discouragement gathered up the rope.

Meanwhile, Mr. Coghlan, arrived at the head of the stairs, paused.

"I wonder we don't hear the bell," he said. "Perhaps Surridge can't find the rope; I will go after him. Glory, dear, take them to your hiding-place"—waving his hand towards his family.

Glorvina, with a lingering glance, obeyed. Her guardian turned away, and they hurried into the first of the north rooms.

"Well secured, I see," said Tim; and, taking the bar of the first door in his hand, he was about to put it in the staples; but Glorvina caught his arm.

"Not till they—not till my guardian comes!" she exclaimed.

"But listen to the noise below, at the front door," remonstrated Tim. "We dare not wait. It might peril the whole family."

"At all risks it must be left," she ordered sternly; "yet no; take the others on to the last room and secure them. I will wait here and admit my guardian and Mr. Surridge."

"I will not leave you, Glorvina!" he exclaimed. "Do you know that I would die for you? They shall walk over my dead body before they reach you."

"But I am in no danger yet," she said.

"Are you not? Listen then!"

And Glorvina did in fact hear the sound of heavy blows at several places on both doors and shutters.

"Oh, hasten, dearest uncle!" she cried in agony. "Go into the last room and fasten yourself in at once!"

"Not without my husband"—"Not without papa," cried both the other ladies.

Glorvina sighed hopelessly. Why did not the alarm ring? Why did they not come? Ah, soon the Whiteboys would intercept them between the north and south corridors! Her nerves were strung to a pitch of tension which made it an effort to resist screaming, when, just as a crash announced that the hall door was forced, Mr. Coghlan and Mr. Surridge came. She dragged her guardian in with one hand, the other extended to the tutor. They were in and the bar was up, just as rough voices and a yell of rage rose from the hall.

"Let us proceed without delay," said the clergyman in his calm quiet tones. "[illegible] fasten every door after us."

And thus in silence and haste they bolted, barred and barricaded the doors one after another, till the last chamber was reached.

Then Murphy placed the candles on the table, and Mrs. Coghlan sank into a chair.

"But, uncle," exclaimed Glorvina, "why did you not ring the alarm to call the soldiers?"

"The rope was cut, my darling," he answered—"severed all but a strand, which the first pull separated. Some traitor's work! Look, Surridge has it on his arm, I suppose to keep for evidence on a future day—if we ever see one," he added.

For the noises from below, of shouts, yells, and blows on doors, reached them even there. Then the tutor drew Mr. Coghlan aside.

"We are safe here," he said in a low tone, "only till these men batter in the doors. It will take them some time; but they may use fire and ultimately they must succeed, for they are many and have stout arms and axes. Some one must descend from this window and run to the barracks."

"But the height above the ground is awful through the moat being there; and they will have sentinels posted outside, you may be sure."

"No matter; it must be risked. It is the only chance to save the ladies and children. That is why I brought the rope. It will be nearly the length. We can add some strips of tapestry to it and tie it to the bedpost."

"It does seem in truth our only chance," replied Coghlan; and, turning back to his family, he announced the tutor's plan and its necessity. "Unfortunately I am lame," he added, "or I would undertake the enterprise myself; but one of us must go. Murphy, I fear you are too old, my faithful fellow"—as the old man stepped forward to offer his services, though with a pale face.

The footman shrank back trembling as his master chanced to glance at him.

"They would cut us to pieces," said the man with chattering teeth.

"I never thought of you," said the Squire contemptuously; there are gentlemen present! Tim O'Brien, I ask you for this service without hesitation, because you will do it for her you love."

But Tim O'Brien stood as pale as death and as silent. Glorvina by a sudden impulse came to his side.

"You have said you would die for me," she murmured. "Do this for me!"

He went to the window and looked down; then turned away with a shudder.

"I cannot see the bottom distinctly in this obscurity," he said; "yet—yes, there is something white at the bottom of the wall." And he turned away sullenly.

"I had hoped," broke in the soft diffident voice of the tutor, "that you would do me the honour of asking me, Mr. Coghlan. Will you permit me to go, since no one better can be found?"

"My dear fellhw," said the Squire, pressing his hand, "rather say how can I thank you for the offer."

"We must be quick," declared the tutor; and he tore down some of the old tapestry; "the ladies can help us with this, if any one has scissors."

Glorvina was by his side in a moment.

"Here is a pair," she said. "Oh, forgive me that I did not estimate you rightly till now."

He answered her by a happy smile. What cared he for Whiteboys or high walls if he pleased her?

The rope was ready, the heavy bedstead was pulled to the window, the rope fastened securely to it; and it was time, for now the ruffians had tracked them to their shelter, and were already assailing the first door with awful yells and execrations.

The tutor stepped up to the window-sill.

"Pull up the rope when you feel it free," he said. "And adieu!"

Then, with that gentle smile they knew so well, he seized the rope and swung himself off.

Glorvina breathed deeply; then, looking up, she saw Tim, with an evil look on his face, approach the post to which the rope was attached, and which now creaked as it was drawn by the descent of the tutor. She sprang forward in a moment and laid her hand on the knot. He marked the gesture and turned away, angry and discomfited.

An old hostler on his death-bed in Coburg, said to those around him that he wished the contents of his trunk given to the Presbyterian church of the town and the eldest daughter of his employer. The trunk was found to contain about $4,000 mainly in small coin, just as it was 'tipped' to him by guests at the hotel.

LIGHTNING.—On the 14th inst. The barn of Mr. Henry Mencer, near Elmwood was struck by lightning and his son had a narrow escape of being killed. The boy was almost blind for some time and it was feared that he would lose the sight of one eye, but we are glad to learn that he is recovering and that his sight will be restored.—Hanover Post.

THE FRUIT GARDEN.

The beds of Strawberries, if not already mulched should have the ground covered with straw or coarse hay at once, before the berries get large enough to fall to the ground. Newly set beds will need to be kept clear of weeds, and the soil stirred frequently. Picking and packing for market are very important operations. It should be remembered that appearance goes a great way in selling fruit. Over-ripe berries should be left out, as a single one may spoil the sale of the whole box. Have the crates of a size that they can be handled easily, and mark them plain and neatly. The fruit canes of the Blackberries, and Raspberries should be tied up to stakes or trellises. The young growing canes form the fruiting ones for the next year; cut away all except 3 to 5 to each stool, and when large enough tie them up; they should be pinched off at 4 feet for raspberries and 6 feet for blackberries. The currants and Gooseberries will be better with a good mulch of litter from the barn-yard, or chips from the wood-pile. Keep a sharp lookout for the "Currant worm," beginning to fight it from the very first. White Hellebore is the standard remedy. See articles on page 247. The one-year-old grape-vine set this spring should be allowed to grow but one shoot. If older vines were set, they should not be allowed to bear, but devote all their energies in getting established. All growing shoots should be kept secured to stakes or trellises.—American Agriculturist.

KITCHEN AND MARKET GARDEN

So much depends upon keeping the weeds in check that, unless the rake, hoe, and cultivator are used promptly and effectively the returns will not be profitable. A well kept vegetable garden is not only a source of comfort, but also of ecomony to every farmer. Too many people go from one end of the season to the other without a fair supply of fresh and wholesome garden vegatables. Salt pork and dry beans are excellent in their way, but not suited for constant use in hot weather. It is not pracitable for farmers in general to have fresh meat continuonsly and the frequent use of salt meat may be made vastly more acceptable if it is accompanied by an abundance of fresh vegatables. Farmers, of all others, should have vegetables in the greatest variety and abundance, from radishes, lettuce, young onions, green peas, etc., among the earliets, to tomatoes, cabbage, Lima beans, and other among the largest. Moreover their should be, during the season, a full abundance of Melons and Watermelons—not one or two, now and then, but a daily wheelbarrow load—enough for the whole family twice a day. Provide for a succession of all the crops that will bear planting at frequent intervals through the season. By this time the asparagus will have its season and the tops should be allowed to grow and prepare the murishment for the early shoot, of the next year's cutting. The shade of the tops will prevent the growth of most weeds. The Lima beans should go in at once, if not already planted. A little attention will be needed to aid the young vines to take the pole. The bush sorts of beans should be sown in succession. The "Refuge" is regarded as the best late variety, especially for pickling. The early crop of cabbages should have frequent hoeings. If the cabbage worms appear remove them by picking, or the use of water heated to 160 degrees. A garden is not complete without sweet corn, which should be sown at frequent intervals, that there way be a long season of fresh ears. Cucumber vines are frequently troubled by insects; dust the young plants with a mixture of ashes and plaster. Sow for pickles the last of this month, and in well manured rows. put in a plenty of seed to allow some for the bugs. Egg plant need very rich soil. The potato bug will destroy them if not watched. The remedy is the same as when on potato vines.—

Squashes are subject to several enemies which work, some on the leaves and others bore into the stems. Hand-pick the first, and cover the stem with earth near the roots, to prevent the others. Tomatoes will need trellises by means of which the fruit can be kept from the ground. Fruit ripened in the free air is much better than that which has matured in contact with the ground. A simple framework of poles is quickly and easily made.—American Agriculturist.

HOW TO DESTROY CURRANT WORMS.

"H. G.," Cheshire, Conn., writes that he has used air-slaked lime to currant worms, and finds it "to do the work pretty surely," and congratulates himself that he runs "no danger from poison." This last remark has reference to the use of White Hellebore, which some fear to use because it is poisonous. With regard to this we would say that when Hellebore is promptly used, at the first appearance of insects, its use will be discontinued long before the fruit is ripe. Were the fruit to be but partially covered with the powder, it would be so soild no one could eat it. Were one to eat a berry upon which was any considerable porton of powered Hellebore, the taste would at once prevent the eating of more. Indeed we can not see how it is possible for any injury to result from the eating of fruit from bushes upon which Hellebor has been used to kill insects. The poison has been widely used for many years, and we have never heard of any ill results from its application. When dusted upon the bushes as a dirty powder, it may cause severe sneezing but it is vastly better to use it mixed with water. Place a tea spoon-ful of powder in a bowl; pour upon it a little boiling hot water; stir so as to wet every partical, then add more water, stir well and pour into a pail; then rinse the bowl and pour the washings into the pail, which is then to be filled with cool water. This preparation [illegible] with this as with all [illegible] Those who [illegible] and where there are but two or three bushes, it is advisable to do so, can avoid much of the necessity of [illegible] by destroying the eggs of the caterpillar. These are laid upon the underside of the lower leaves of the bushes, and the leaves themselves may be plucked, or the eggs crushed between the thumb and finger.—American Agriculturist.

THINGS YOU KNOW AND DON'T KNOW.

CURRANT WORMS.

Break off the young sprouts or suckers that start from the roots of currant bushes and there will seldom be any trouble from the currant worm.

[illegible]

Recent experiments in England show that thin sowing of wheat in drills is more productive than thick sowing. By special culture on small plots, a single grain to the hill has given a yield of 100 to 162 bushels to the acre, according to the Experiment Record.

TOMATOES

If you would have a full crop of good tomatoes, water the young plants twice each week with rich liquid manure. Nip off many of the new shoots and tie the heavy stems up so as to expose the fruit to sun. Mulch thickly around the main stem and thin out where the fruit grows too closely.

TO TELL THE AGE OF A HORSE.

The following is the method of an Alabama gentleman:—"After the horse is six years old a wrinkle comes in the eyelid at the upper corner of the lower lid, and every year thereafter he has one well defined wrinkle for each year of his age over nine. If, for instance, a horse has three wrinkles, he is twelve; if four, thirteen. Add the number of wrinkles to nine and you will always get at the age.

LINSEED MEAL FOR PIGS.

Suffolk and Berkshire pigs may be profitably fed, to be sold at nine or ten months, upon clover, corn meal, linseed meal, or corn and oatmeal. Half a pound of linseed meal per day on the average, to six-month-old pigs, would be sufficient.

HENS AND CHICKENS IN THE FRUIT YARD.—Poultry get a goodpart of their living from insects, provided they have the oppertunity. The fruit yard to our sorrow, is often to much frequented by noxious insects. By a bringing together of the fowls and vermin, double good is accomplished, the former are fed and the latter destroyed. Chickens are very fond of fruit and will devour it soon after it drops from the tree, and in this way both the worthless fruit and the insect usually contained in it, will be consumed. One of the most successful fruit growers we are acquanied with keeps poultry under his trees at nearly all times and feels that they do much to make his fruit what it is—fair to the eye, pleasing to the taste, and filling to the pocket-book.—American Agriculturist.

DON'T GO TO KANSAS.

The Berlin News publishes the following letter from Kansas; dated May 3rd the writer of which, it says, belonging to one of the most intelligent families in the county of Waterloo, and is in politics a strong Reformer:—

"I suopose many are anxious to hear from Kansas. As I am a resident, I think I will be able to state some facts. A wheat state Kansas cannot be called; as there is hardly a good crop once out of five years. Farmers cannot depend on growing wheat in the State. By all appearance wheat cannot be redconed at a higher arverage than 10 to 15 bushels for the season; But this is not the worst. How can a farmer eqpect to make money when his highest price is only 70 cts. per bushel? Another thing, is, what is the reason the great majority of the farms are [illegible] on mortgages? Many people say because not every one has enough money to start with. But what is the reason that the mortgages are not lifted when they come due? Simply because they do not get the crops and prices to get the money for the same. And more, on these mortgages, the lowest interest is 10 per cent and many are as high as 12 to 15. How can a man afford to pay this? There is another drawback in the state, and that is that it is apt to get fearfully dry or to wet. One of the two is almost certain.

About our mud I will give you a small example. In the month of March I saw a man driving an empty wagon having two stout mules attached thereto, and to say the truth he was sure to get stuck every ten rods. The four wheels of the wagon were a solid mas as of mud. To see a spoke, fellge or tire was in vain, not a glimpse though of the whole size of the wheels could be obtained. This is the kind of mud we occupied in March.

High winds are also very bad here. Winds have done so much damage to fall wheat in some localities as the wheat is broke off by wind. When a high wind gets up its temper here the air will be all full of dust, so that it is impossible to see ten rods.

A person died at Eger, in Bohemia, a short time since, who lived in a room by himself for thirty years. During all that time he neither washed, combed his hair, nor cut his finger nails.

An English Queen's cousel asked a witness if he was a guager? "Yes," said the witness. "That is," continued the lawyer, "you taste wine." Precisely, was the reply. "Ah one has only to look in your face to see that," retorted the longrobed gentleman. The witness, quick as thought, replied: "Yes, and one has only to look in your face to see that you share my little weakness."

The chaplain of an Illinois Legislature prayed that God would give the members 'more wisdom and greater promptitude.' The Maine chaplain during the recent deadlock cried out: 'O Lord, have compassion upon our bewildered representatives and senators. They have been sitting and sitting, and have hatched nothing. O Lord, let them arise from their nest and go home, and the praise shall be Thine.' Pennsylvania chaplain recently prayed: 'Give these lawmakers, O God! more brains—more hearts—more [illegible].'

HOUSE CLEANING.

I hear the carpet-beater's stroke,
I see the dusty carpet smoke,
I hear the swash of brush and pail,
And soap-suds taint the summer-gale.

The front piazza open spreads
A view of chairs and feather beds;
While on the line hang coats and pants,
Which [illegible]

Through open windows, robbed of sash,
The crazy curtains flap and lash;
The chamber window sports a dress—
Pathetic signal of distress!

High o'er the din a woman's voice
In merry cadence doth rejoice,
Bare-armed, dishevelled, 'midst the noise—
Behold the partner of our joys!

Thrice happy then the chap who can
Be gone a week "to see a man;"
Nor prematurely homeward hie,
But give the whitewash time to dry.

"O woman! in our hours of ease,"
We never dreamed of pranks like these;
The cleaning spells have come, no doubt,
E'er since Eve cleaned old Adam out.

Until he bags a tribe of worms,
And then he skips the fence.

Then off he skoots to where the stream

Enticeth sundry fish.

And then with slow and weary steps,
Homeward doth he wend—
And he is led to a back shed,
And frightful cries ascend.

CHAPTER X.

Others besides the young girls had heard the banshee-cry, and were alarmed at it. The servants talked of it next day with bated breath. Mrs. Coghlan was puzzled and uneasy.

James Surridge alone read it rightly. He was convinced that these strange incidents pointed to an endeavour by some of the people to warn the members of the family of approaching danger. Glorvina was very popular with the peasantry, as a sympathiser with their cause; and Mrs. Coghlan and Eva were beloved for many acts of kindness. Probably Mr. Coghlan himself, the clergyman thought, was not personally disliked, though the fanatic rebels might mean to startle other magistrates by his fate. He was confirmed in his opinion next morning during his walk with Teddy. They met Kathleen, who, having perceived that the boy had run on with his hoop out of hearing, turned back and said to Mr. Surridge—

"If you plaze, sorr, may I spake wid ye?"

"Surely, Kathleen. Is there anything I can do for you?"

"No sorr, it's not for meself I would spake. But, oh, there's terrible anger about, sorr, 'cos of the boys as is to suffer next week at Dublin! And it's wishin' I am that the family was away! Indade, sorr, it would be better if ye'd take a holiday for a bit yerself."

"Would you have me forsake my friends in peril, Kathleen?" he asked reproachfully. "Surely that is not what you would do?"

"I hope not, sorr; but I haven't the bold heart you have. And it would be death to anyone who took the part of those the boys had sintenced."

"But, Kathleen, this is all very wicked. Those who know murder is about to be committed and do not warn the victims are almost equally guilty with the murderers, and run a risk of sharing their fate in the end."

"But it's not murder at all, at all, I'm not spaking of," she retorted angrily. "only justice, sorr! And, if folks can't get it, they'll take it!"—and she was passing on, but Surridge took hold of her arm.

"Stay," he said. "In return for the life I gave you, Kathleen, tell me if any immediate danger beyond the risk every one now runs in this unhappy country is hanging over the Priory!"

"It's not to the likes of me they would tell it if there was," she replied. "And if they had, it isn't Kathleen who would betray a trust. But I've eyes and ears, and I tell you, sorr, that you and Miss Glorvina to had better get out of the Priory before Mr. Coghlan returns." And, snatching up her pail, she walked away.

"It is just as I feared—Heaven help us!" sighed the tutor rather hopelessly; for that morning there had come a letter from Mr. Coghlan announcing his speedy return, but not a word in it of any intention to remove his family to a safer home.

He had been, he said, unable to save O'Rourke's life by getting a pardon, but he had seen the man and received his forgiveness, and even his thanks for what he and Miss Desmond had done for him and promised for his family.

"His wife was with him," he added, "and was also grateful. The priest has convinced O'Rourke of his guilt, and the man is very penitent. I think, after this reconciliation with the condemned man himself, we need fear no revenge from the people. I shall not wait over the execution now, but be with you on Thursday next."

It was Tuesday now; on Thursday Mr. Coghlan would be home; on Friday O'Rourke would suffer. The tutor wished that Mr. Coghlan, if he would not remove his family, had at least remained over the execution and till the feeling against him had somewhat passed away. But Coghlan was a wrong-headed, reckless man, though honourable and tender-hearted.

* * * * * * * * * *

On Thursday evening the Squire came home, grave, and yet glad to see his family again. He thanked the tutor for his care and attention; and James Surridge, when alone with him again, pressed on him the advisability of the family's going to Dublin for a time. But Mr. Coghlan persisted in his opinion that all danger was over.

"The threats," he said, were made to save O'Rourke; but, now that he is sentenced and as good as dead, they will not annoy us again."

There was a good deal of gloom hanging over the family the next day; it was Dan O'Rourke's death-day, and there] are few who would not be affected at, even involuntarily, causing a man to suffer the last penalty of the law.

They were all glad when Tim O'Brien came into dinner, and cheered them by his even unusually boisterous spirits. So wild at times did his glee appear during the meal, that Glorvina more than once looked at him with a fear that he had been drinking.

After dinner however, when he joined them in the drawing-room, his exuberant gaiety seemed to have deserted him. He sat quiet, answering occasionally at random, and sometimes appearing to be listening, Glorvina thought.

The girls had seated themselves at work at a small table near the fire; the children were playing on the hearthrug with a puzzle their father had brought them. Mr. Coghlan proposed a game of whist with his wife, Tim and the tutor. The card-table was drawn forward, and they had just taken their seats at it, when there was the report of a gun and a crash of glass; for a shot, striking the pier-glass, had shivered it.

There was a loud cry from the startled women. The tutor, springing up, rushed to the window and instantly closed and barred the shutters.

Happily no one was hurt, though, had not Mr. Coghlan happened at that moment to have bent forward over the table, the shot must have gone through his head. The family looked at each other in stunned alarm. Then little Norah burst into a violent fit of crying, and Eva clasped her arms around her father's neck. The tutor turned back and approached Glorvina.

"Take them all to the north rooms, Miss Desmond," he said, "and secure yourselves; I will ring the alarm;" and he snatched up a candle from the table and left the room.

Mrs. Coghlan rang the bell violently. The servants, already alarmed by the report of the gun, thronged in, looking pale and scared, while Glorvina whispered a few brief sentences to her guardian.

"An admirable thought!" he answered. "We will go at once."

"Where—what?" asked O'Brien eagerly.

"Into hiding," said his host drily. "Be so good as to take care of my wife, and lead her up-stairs."

"But surely," exclaimed Tim, "we men will not hide! Let the ladies do so by all means; but we must try a few shots with the rebels."

"My good fellow," replied Coglan, "I neither wish to kill nor be killed. A man's blood is a heavy weight on the soul. Lead Mrs. Coghlan to the north rooms. Murphy are all the doors and windows secured?"

"Yes, sorr," replied the trembling servant "Mr. Surridge sees them all fastened himself at dusk every night."

"Yet the shutters of that window"—pointing to it—"are not closed."

"But, sorr, I fastened them with my own hands," declared the man.

"Oh, never mind, don't dispute about it!" cried Glorvina impatiently. "Make haste up-stairs."

The tutor had hurried to the bell-tower, which was opposite to the bachelors' turret. The rope from it hung in an empty room opening upon the south corridor, where the family slept; but it was hooked up out of Teddy's reach, lest in a fit of mischief he should alarm the neighborhood.

The tutor uncoiled it and pulled it with all his strength; there came only a faint sound as from a feeble stroke. Surprised, he renewed his effort with greater force. The rope yielded to his hand this time, and came clattering to his feet. Greatly surprised and dismayed, he held the fallen end to the candle, and perceived that it had been cut through, except one strand, which was frayed and torn by the recent pull. The strand left had sufficed to support it until a strong pull brought it down. They were betrayed! No call for help could be given. The tutor, with a sigh of discouragement gathered up the rope.

Meanwhile, Mr. Coghlan, arrived at the head of the stairs, paused.

"I wonder we don't hear the bell," he said. "Perhaps Surridge can't find the rope; I will go after him. Glory, dear, take them to your hiding-place"—waving his hand towards his family.

Glorvina, with a lingering glance, obeyed. Her guardian turned away, and they hurried into the first of the north rooms.

"Well secured, I see," said Tim; and, taking the bar of the first door in his hand, he was about to put it in the staples; but Glorvina caught his arm.

"Not till they—not till my guardian comes!" she exclaimed.

"But listen to the noise below, at the front door," remonstrated Tim. "We dare not wait. It might peril the whole family."

"At all risks it must be left," she ordered sternly; yet no; take the others on to the last room and secure them. I will wait here and admit my guardian and Mr. Surridge."

"I will not leave you, Glorvina!" he exclaimed. "Do you know that I would die for you? They shall walk over my dead body before they reach you."

"But I am in no danger yet," she said.

"Are you not? Listen then!"

And Glorvina did in fact hear the sound of heavy blows at several places on both doors and shutters.

"Oh, [illegible], dearest aunt!" she cried in agony. "Go into the last room and fasten yourself in at once!"

"Not without my husband"—"Not without papa," cried both the other ladies.

Glorvina sighed helplessly. Why did not the alarm ring? Why did they not come? Ah, soon the Whiteboys would intercept them between the north and south corridors! Her nerves were strung to a pitch of tension which made it an effort to resist screaming, when, just as a crash announced that the hall door was forced, Mr. Coghlan and Mr. Surridge came. She dragged her guardian in with one hand, the other extended to the tutor. They were in and the bar was up, just as rough voices and a yell of rage rose from the hall.

"Let us proceed without delay," said the clergyman in his calm quiet tones, "and fasten every door after us."

And thus in silence and haste they bolted, barred and barricaded the doors one after another, till the last chamber was reached.

Then Murphy placed the candles on the table, and Mrs. Coghlan sank into a chair.

"But, uncle," exclaimed Glorvina, "why did you not ring the alarm to call the soldiers?"

"The rope was cut, my darling," he answered—"severed all but a strand, which the first pull separated. Some traitor's work! Look, Surridge has it on his arm, I suppose to keep for evidence on a future day—if we ever see one," he added.

For the noises from below, of shouts, yells, and blows on doors, reached them even there. Then the tutor drew Mr. Coghlan aside.

"We are safe here," he said in a low tone, "only till these men batter in the doors. It will take them some time; but they may use fire and ultimately they must succeed, for they are many and have stout arms and axes. Some one must descend from this window and run to the barracks."

"But the height above the ground is awful through the moat being there; and they will have sentinels posted outside, you may be sure."

"No matter; it must be risked. It is the only chance to save the ladies and children. That is why I brought the rope. It will be nearly the length. We can add some strips of tapestry to it and tie it to the bedpost."

"It does seem in truth our only chance," replied Coghlan; and, turning back to his family, he announced the tutor's plan and its necessity. "Unfortunately I am lame," he added, "or I would undertake the enterprise myself; but one of us must go. Murphy, I fear you are too old, my faithful fellow"—as the old man stepped forward to offer his services, though with a pale face.

The footman shrank back trembling as his master chanced to glance at him.

"They would cut us to pieces," said the man with chattering teeth.

"I never thought of you," said the Squire contemptuously; there are gentlemen present! Tim O'Brien, I ask you for this service without hesitation, because you will do it for her you love."

But Tim O'Brien stood as pale as death and as silent. Glorvina by a sudden impulse came to his side.

"You have said you would die for me," she murmured. "Do this for me!"

He went to the window and looked down; then turned away with a shudder.

"I cannot see the bottom distinctly in this obscurity," he said; "yet—yes, there is something white at the bottom of the wall." And he turned away sullenly.

"I had hoped," broke in the soft diffident voice of the tutor, "that you would do me the honour of asking me, Mr. Coghlan. Will you permit me to go, since no one better can be found?"

"My dear fellow," said the Squire, pressing his hand, "rather say how can I thank you for the offer."

"We must be quick," declared the tutor; and he tore down some of the old tapestry; "the ladies can help us with this, if any one has scissors."

Glorvina was by his side in a moment.

"Here is a pair," she said. "Oh, forgive me that I did not estimate you rightly till now."

He answered her by a happy smile. What cared he for Whiteboys or high walls if he pleased her?

The rope was ready, the heavy bedstead was pulled to the window, the rope fastened securely to it; and it was time, for now the ruffians had tracked them to their shelter, and were already assailing the first door with awful yells and execrations.

The tutor stepped up to the window-sill.

"Pull up the rope when you feel it free," he said. "And adieu!"

Then, with that gentle smile they knew so well, he seized the rope and swung himself off.

Glorvina breathed deeply; then, looking up, she saw Tim, with an evil look on his face, approach the post to which the rope was attached, and which now creaked as it was drawn by the descent of the tutor. She sprang forward in a moment and laid her hand on the knot. He marked the gesture and turned away, angry and discomfited.

An old hostler on his death-bed in Coburg, said to those around him that he wished the contents of his trunk given to the Presbyterian church of the town and the eldest daughter of his employer. The trunk was found to contain about $4,000 mainly in small coin, just as it was 'tipped' to him by guests at the hotel.

LIGHTNING.—On the 14th inst. The barn of Mr. Henry Menser, near Elmwood was struck by lightning and his son had a narrow escape of being killed. The boy was almost blind for some time and it was feared that he would lose the sight of one eye, but we are glad to learn that he is recovering and that his sight will be restored.—Hanover Post.

THE FRUIT GARDEN.

The beds of Strawberries, if not already mulched should have the ground covered with straw or coarse hay at once, before the berries get large enough to fall to the ground. Newly set beds will need to be kept clear of weeds, and the soil stirred frequently. Picking and packing for market are very important operations. It should be remembered that appearance goes a great way in selling fruit. Over-ripe berries should be left out, as a single one may spoil the sale of the whole box. Have the crates of a size that they can be handled easily, and mark them plain and neatly. The fruit canes of the Blackberries, and Raspberries should be tied up to stakes or trellises. The young growing canes form the fruiting ones for the next year; cut away all except 3 to 5 to each stool, and when large enough tie them up; they should be pinched off at 4 feet for rasberries and 6 feet for blackberries. The currants and Gooseberries will be better with a good mulch of litter from the barn-yard, or chips from the wood-pile. Keep a sharp lookout for the "Currant worm," beginning to fight it from the very first. White Hellebore is the standard remedy. See articles on page 247. The one-year-old grape-vine set this spring should be allowed to grow but one shoot. If older vines were set, they should not be allowed to bear, but devote all their energies in getting established. All growing shoots should be kept secured to stakes or trellises.—American Agriculturist.

KITCHEN AND MARKET GARDEN

So much depends upon keeping the weeds in check that, unless the rake, hoe, and cultivator are used promptly and effectively the returns will not be profitable. A well kept vegetable garden is not only a source of comfort, but also of ecomony to every farmer. Too many people go from one end of the season to the other without a fair supply of fresh and wholesome garden vegatables. Salt pork and dry beans are excellent in their way, but not suited for constant use in hot weather. It is not pracitable for farmers in general to have fresh meat continuously and the frequent use of salt meat may be made vastly more acceptable if it is accompanied by an abundance of fresh vegatables. Farmers, of all others, should have vegetables in the greatest variety and abundance, from radishes, lettuce, young onions, green peas, etc., among the earlists, to tomatoes, cabbage, Lima beans, and other among the largest. Moreover their should be, during the season, a full abundance of Melons and Watermelons—not one or two, now and then, but a daily wheelbarrow load—enough for the whole family twice a day. Provide for a succession of all the crops that will bear planting at frequent intervals through the season. By this time the asparagus will have its season and the tops should be allowed to grow and prepare the murishment for the early shoot, of the next year's cutting. The shade of the tops will prevent the growth of most weeds. The Lima beans should go in at once, if not already planted. A little attention will be needed to aid the young vines to take the pole. The bush sorts of beans should be sown in succession. The "Refuge" is regarded as the best late variety, especially for pickling. The early crop of cabbages should have frequent hoeings. If the cabbage worms appear remove them by picking, or the use of water heated to 160 degrees. A garden is not complete without sweet corn, which should be sown at frequent intervals, that there way be a long season of fresh ears. Cucumber vines are frequently troubled by insects; dust the young plants with a mixture of ashes and plaster. Sow for pickles the last of this month, and in well manured rows. put in a plenty of seed to allow some for the bugs. Egg plant need very rich soil. The potato bug will destroy them if not watched. The remedy is the same as when on potato vines.—

Squashes are subject to several enemies which work, some on the leaves and others bore into the stems. Hand-pick the first, and cover the stem with earth near the roots, to prevent the others. Tomatoes will need trellises by means of which the fruit can be kept from the ground. Fruit ripened in the free air is much better than that which has matured in contact with the ground. A simple frame-work of poles is quickly and easily made.—American Agriculturist.

HOW TO DESTROY CURRANT WORMS.

"H. G.," Cheshire, Conn., writes that he has used air-slaked lime to currant worms, and finds it "to do the work pretty surely," and congratulates himself that he runs "no danger from poison." This last remark has reference to the use of White Hellebore, which some fear to use because it is poisonous. With regard to this we would say that when Hellebore is promptly used, at the first appearance of insects, its use will be discontinued long before the fruit is ripe. Were the fruit to be but partialy covered with the powder, it would be so soild no one could eat it. Were one to eat a berry upon which was any considerable porton of powered Hellebore, the taste would at once prevent the eating of more. Indeed we can not see how it is possible for any injury to result from the eating of fruit from bushes upon which Hellebor has been used to kill insects. The poison has been widely used for many years, and we have never heard of any ill results from its application. When dusted upon the bushes as a dirty powder, it may cause severe sneezing but it is vastly better to use it mixed with water. Place a tea spoon-ful of powder in a bowl; pour upon it a little boiling hot water; stir so as to wet every partical, then add more water, stir well and pour into a pail; then rinse the bowl and pour the washings into the pail, which is then to be filled with cold water. This preparation [illegible] the mature [illegible] or [illegible] effective remedy [illegible] with things as with all similar [illegible] depends upon applying the remedy early. Those who will take the pains and where there are but a few bushes, it is advisable to do so, can avoid much of the necessity of poisoning by destroying the eggs of the caterpillar. These are laid upon the underside of the lower leaves of the bushes, and the leaves themselves may be plucked, or the eggs crushed between the thumb and finger.—American Agriculturist.

THINGS YOU KNOW AND DON'T KNOW.

CURRANT WORMS.

Break off the young sprouts or suckers that start from the roots of currant bushes and there will seldom be any trouble from the currant worm.

[SOWING] WHEAT.

Recent experiments in England show that thin sowing of wheat in drills is more productive than thick sowing. By special culture on small plots, a single grain to the hill has given a yield of 100 to 162 bushels to the acre, according to the Experiment Record.

TOMATOES

If you would have a full crop of good tomatoes, water the young plants twice each week with rich liquid manure. Nip off many of the new shoots and tie the heavy stems up so as to expose the fruit to sun. Mulch thickly around the main stem and thin out where the fruit grows too closely.

TO TELL THE AGE OF A HORSE.

The following is the method of an Alabama gentleman:—"After the horse is six years old a wrinkle comes in the eyelid at the upper corner of the lower lid, and every year thereafter he has one well defined wrinkle for each year of his age over nine. If, for instance, a horse has three wrinkles, he is twelve; if four, thirteen. Add the number of wrinkles to nine and you will always get at the age.

LINSEED MEAL FOR PIGS.

Suffolk and Berkshire pigs may be profitably fed, to be sold at nine or ten months, upon clover, corn meal, linseed meal, or corn and oatmeal. Half a pound of linseed meal per day on the average, to six-month-old pigs, would be sufficient.

HENS AND CHICKENS IN THE FRUIT YARD.—Poultry get a goodpart of their living from insects, provided they have the oppertunity. The fruit yard to our sorrow, is often to much frequented by noxious insects. By a bringing together of the fowls and vermin, double good is accomplished, the former are fed and the latter destroyed. Chickens are very fond of fruit and will devour it soon after it drops from the tree, and in this way both the worthless fruit and the insect usually contained in it, will be consumed. One of the most successful fruit growers we are acquanied with keeps poultry under his trees at nearly all times and feels that they do much to make his fruit what it is—fair to the eye, pleasing to the taste, and filling to the pocket-book.—American Agriculturist.

DON'T GO TO KANSAS.

The Berlin News publishes the following letter from Kansas; dated May 3rd the writer of which, it says, belonging to one of the most intelligent families in the county of Waterloo, and is in politics a strong Reformer:—

"I suppose many are anxious to hear from Kansas. As I am a resident, I think I will be able to state some facts. A wheat state Kansas cannot be called; as there is hardly a good crop once out of five years. Farmers cannot depend on growing wheat in the State. By all appearance wheat cannot be redconed at a higher arverage than 10 to 15 bushels for the season; But this is not the worst. How can a farmer expect to make money when his highest price is only 70 cts. per bushel? Another thing is, what is the reason the great majority of the farms are resting on mortgages? Many people say because not every one has enough money to start with. But what is the reason that the mortgages are not lifted when they come due? Simply because they do not get the crops and prices to get the money for the same. And more, on these mortgages, the lowest interest is 10 per cent and many are as high as 12 to 15. How can a man afford to pay this? There is another drawback in the state, and that is that it is apt to get fearfully dry or to wet. One of the two is almost certain.

About our mud I will give you a small example. In the month of March I saw a man driving an empty wagon having two stout mules attached thereto, and to say the truth he was sure to get stuck every ten rods. The four wheels of the wagon were a solid mas as of mud. To see a spoke, felloe or tire was in vain, not a glimpse though of the whole size of the wheels could be obtained. This is the kind of mud we occupied in March.

High winds are also very bad here. Winds have done so much damage to fall wheat in some localities as the wheat is broke off by wind. When a high wind gets up its temper here the air will be all full of dust, so that it is impossible to see ten rods.

A person died at Eger, in Bohemia, a short time since, who lived in a room by himself for thirty years. During all that time he neither washed, combed his hair, nor cut his finger nails.

An English Queen's counsel asked a witness if he was a guager? "Yes," said the witness. "That is," continued the lawyer, "you taste wine." Precisely, was the reply. "Ah one has only to look in your face to see that," retorted the longrobed gentleman. The witness, quick as thought, replied: "Yes, and one has only to look in your face to see that you share my little weakness."

The chaplain of an Illinois Legislature prayed that God would give the members 'more wisdom and greater promptitude.' The Maine chaplain during the recent deadlock cried out: 'O Lord, have compassion upon our bewildered representatives and senators. They have been sitting and sitting, and have hatched nothing. O Lord, let them arise from their nest and go home, and the praise shall be Thine.' Pennsylvania chaplain recently prayed: 'Give these lawmakers, O God! more brains—more brains—more brains.'

T., G. & B. RAILWAY.

A MEETING of the English bondholders of this Company held on the 31st ult., at which Messrs. Beatty and Cumberland were present, a cablegram dated the same day states that Mr. Cumberland has purchased a large number of English bonds for the purpose of obtaining a majority of votes in favor of the lease to the Northern. Upon a vote being taken, it stood 14 for the Northern and 4 for the Grand Trunk. However, the bargain cannot be closed without the consent of the Ontario Government, and this we do not think they will get, at least we hope not.

THE state of Ireland appears to be daily growing worse, and unless prompt measures are immediately adopted, law and order will have to be enforced at the point of the bayonet.

MR. CROOKS, acting as Attorney General during the absence of Mr. Mowat, has given instructions to have a searching investigation made into the cause of the disaster at London. We hope the Crown Attorney will use his best endeavors to place the guilt if any there is, on the proper shoulders, and that the authorities will show no leniency, should it be proved that the accident was caused by criminal negligence.

MEASURES to extradite the Feeleys have been taken, and we have every reason to believe they will be successful. In the meantime rumors are afloat that others of the Vigilance Committee, fearing the result of the bringing back of the Feeley's, are very anxious to turn Queen's evidence. Should this prove true, there is a strong probability that the perpetrators of the horrible butchery in Biddulph will yet meet with their desserts.

MERRITON, to judge from the reports in the Toronto dailies, is striving hard to rank with places in the United States. Only the other day a young girl of about 15 years of age was criminally assaulted by six fiends in human form and treated in such a brutal manner that she has since died. One of the resident magistrates stated to a reporter, that the place is filled with young rowdies of the most desperate character, and that cases of criminal assault, abortion, poisoning, and drunkenness are of daily occurrence. A nice state of affairs truly.

SOUTH GREY TEACHERS' ASSOCIATION PRESENTATION.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

AT the meeting of the South Grey Teachers' Association held at Flesherton, on the 19th and 20th of May, a beautiful ebony walking-cane, with massive and richly chased silver mounting, suitably inscribed, and accompanied by a very neat and kind address, was presented to Mr. Ferguson, Public School Inspector, by the teachers of Melancthon, who by the recent formation of the County of Dufferin, are now withdrawn from his Inspectorate.

The meetings were held, and the presentation was made in the sumptuously furnished Oddfellows' Hall, kindly lent for the occasion. There was a very large attendance of teachers present. Mr. Greig, of Owen Sound Model School, and Mr. Tait, of Collingwood Collegiate Institute, by their presence, addresses, and illustrations of the teachers' work, added greatly to the success of the meetings.

Mr. Tait kindly devoted both days to the work of the association, his many pupils all appeared glad to meet him again.

Several of the teachers and of the officers of the Association, express their surprise and regret that notwithstanding the manifested patriotic attachment they feel towards our own County Institutions, High Schools, etc., it has been hitherto impossible to obtain the presence of any representative of our own County High School at any meeting of this Association.

E.

MAXWELL, May 23rd, 1881.

PRICEVILLE.

Correspondence to the STANDARD.

ON Tuesday, the 23rd ult., the corner stone of our new School House was laid, a large concourse of citizens being present. The building will be of brick, 36x54 feet, two storey, and will rank in capacity with any country town school house in the county of Grey. From the building plan I judge that the exterior ornamentation of the building will be an attractive feature to the picturesque beauty of our town. A number of coins of the day, copies of the leading Canadian newspapers including the Review, and MARKDALE STANDARD, are among the deposits which future antiquaries will discover when the demands of an over-crowded population will cause them to raze the educational structure we are now building.

Mr. John McArthur is erecting a fine brick structure on the site of his premises burned down last spring, and will be adapted to any mercantile or other business purpose.

Mr. Thomas Conkey is erecting a fine brick building on a site between the store premises of Dr. Ghent and Thomas Nichol, and will be a necessary filling up of a gap on that side of Kincardine street.

Our saw mill is running night and day, thanks to the business energy of Mr. John McLeod, where lumber of all kinds can be had at terms that will astonish builders for cheapness and good quality. The grist mill has had a complete suit of new clothing for summer wear.

Among our commercial changes I may mention that a very formidable rival for supremacy has arisen in the person of Mr. N. B Greir, in the premises lately occupied by Mr. Hall.

Last Saturday the sign-board of the Crown Hotel, kept by Mr. Tuck, was raised. The illuminated painting of the sign, surmounted by as pretty a piece of scroll work in wood as we have seen for many a day, adds a very attractive feature to the already progressing appearance of the Crown Hotel. The painting and work was executed by Mr. James McDowell, of this town.

Thanks to the skill of our medical men, that dire curse of humanity, diphtheria, has had no existence here for many a day. Dr. Bennett has been called to a number of cases in the neighborhood of Markdale, and with success.

FLESHERTON.

From a Correspondent.

TEACHERS' ASSOCIATION.—The Semi-Annual meeting of the South Grey Teachers' Association was held in the Oddfellows' Hall, Flesherton, on Thursday and Friday, the 19 and 20th ult. A large representation of teachers was present from all parts of the South Riding of the County. Great interest was manifested throughout the whole proceedings owing chiefly to the presence of Mr. J. Tait, Mathematical Master of the Collingwood Collegiate Institute, and Mr. Greig, of Owen Sound.

The programme of work done was as follows:—

1st, Mr. Armstrong—Theory vs. Practice in Teaching. 2nd, W. J. Galbraith—Geometry to beginners. 3rd, R. D. Irvine—Arithmetic to beginners. 4th, J. Tait—How to teach History. 5th, M. P. McMaster—How to teach reading to beginners. 6th, W. A. Jones—Teachers' encouragements and discouragements. 7th, N. W. Campbell—Grammatical Analysis and Parsing. 8th, C. W. Morey—How to teach Geography. 9th, J. Tait—How to teach Natural Philosophy.

On Thursday evening a very successful entertainment was given in the Town Hall.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year:—President, M. N. Armstrong; Vice President, W. J. Galbraith; Sec. Treas., J. C. Bain; Delegate to Toronto Convention, W. J. Galbraith. Managing Committee, M. P. McMaster, D. McDonald, J. C. Bain, and two others whose names we did not receive.

The Association meets next October at Durham.

IMPROVEMENTS.—We are glad to see that the Agricultural grounds have been levelled and graded and stands erected for judges. The 1st of July will be celebrated on these grounds by Horse Racing and Games of all descriptions.

FRUIT FESTIVAL.—The Ladies' Aid Association gave a Fruit Festival in the Town Hall on the evening of the 24th May. The programme, which was very creditably rendered, consisted of Songs by the Misses Damude, Christoe, Phillip, Vandusen, Philp, and J. R. Anderson, Dialogues by Misses Carr, Kearns, and Messrs. Anderson and Beattie, Speeches by Revs. Ekins and Garnett. Rev. Mr. Wilson occupied the chair during the evening. The proceeds amounted to $26.65. We congratulate the ladies on the great success of the entertainment.

WHO IS IT?—The person who wrote the correspondence from Flesherton last week is not very well acquainted with the roads leading into our village. We consider the roads are in first-class order, and the Council deserve great praise for keeping them in good condition.

From another Correspondent.

Mr. Wm. McMullen has suffered two raids on his sheep by dogs. The first one some two weeks ago, and the other on Monday morning last. His loss on the two occasions were 20 fine sheep. This section of country is infested with dogs, but fortunately Mr. Mac shot at and wounded one of the guilty animals, so that he was enabled to follow him home and have him killed.

Our Village is likewise infested with the hog tribe, so much so that you can scarcely get along the road or sidewalk for the worst specimens of the hog kind. They are so bold that you may be called upon some day to narrate the untimely end of some of our lady helps, as they often take a tour into the kitchens. Why do not our city fathers have the nuisance abated by having them put in pound or buried, as they did the cow, when they could not live any longer in the atmosphere.

Our Council speak of repairing the road to the station, but they are tardy in starting because of a woman. Never mind she has not said much yet.

Mrs. Wallace's imbicile son went to the well to-day (30th ult.) and some way not known fell in and was drowned. He was quite dead when found.

The prodigal has returned, but in a different style to the one we read about. Mr. R. McKenzie has returned home from Manitoba, after spending a number of years in proserity. His welcome was hearty as his family supposed him dead, not having heard from him for some time.

We have bidden adieu to Mr. Doll for some time, as he took his departure for the land of his nativity on Saturday last. We wish Mr. Doll a good time, and may he bring back lots of German Silver.

Mrs. Merriam and Mrs. Wm. Cullen have been very ill, and at one time there was very little hope of their recovery; but we are happy to say they are now out of danger.

A. E. Gammey, son of Josiah Gammey, passed through here bound for Manitoba last week, and if he reports favorably his father intends following him after a time.

PRESENTATION.—A great many of the Congregation of St. Mary's Church, Maxwell, having for some time entertained the wish to make an acknowledgment to the Rev. Jas. Ward, their pastor, of the inestimable service he has conferred upon the mission here since he was appointed thereto, came to the resolution to do so, and with that intention purchased some valuable books for the purpose.

The presentation took place at the house of Mrs. Madill, Lot No. 5, Con. 6, Osprey, on Thursday evening last, 19th inst., where a few of the subscribers to the testimonial had assembled by special invitation, and a handsome entertainment was provided by Mrs. Madill and her daughters which was done ample justice. The address was read by Mr. Wm. L. B. Hamlin, Sr., and the presentation make by Miss Madill. The address was as follows:

RESPECTED AND REVEREND PASTOR, a large portion of your flock being desirous of expressing their personal regard for you, not only on account of your inestimable services in the cure of souls, and the solid religious advice which you never fail to give,—but also duly appreciating the beneficient and kindly manner in which that advice hasever been given, and hailing you therefore as a true Christian and Champion of Christ's Holy Catholic Church, we beg leave to offer these books for you acceptance, trusting that you will kindly receive the same, thus proving your appreciation of the spirit in which our offering is made. We sincerely hope that you may be long spared to us to conduct the affairs of Holy Church, and to minister to our spiritual wants. In this hope we remain dear pastor and friend, your faithful flock of St. Mary's.

Rev. Mr. Ward on rising to reply, said that he always felt a great difficulty in replying to an address on such an occasion, and stated that he had been informed when first comming to the mission in these parts, that the Maxwell parish was cold, stony, frosty, &c., that, in fact he would find Maxwell a thorn in his path. He was glad to say that the thorn did not press him sorely, that stones were disappearing or were gathered, and that the frost had in a great measure thawed; he found Maxwell and its vicinity a very congenial location for the pure Catholic doctrine of our Holy Church. He dwelt much upon the Catholicity of the Church of England, and said that he firmly beleived that she had more title to the term Catholic, than any other church in Christendom, having been founded in the Apostolic era. After a long and most interesting speech which was attentively listened to, the Rev. gentleman concluded by thanking his faithful flock for this, the first gift he had received since he entered upon his mission.

Diphtheria I understand is rather prevalent in the neighborhood, also scarlet fever.

The Census takers have about finished their labors here.

Business here is pretty lively and seems likely to continue.

Seeding is over and better weather could not be than we had during seeding. There was not a great breadth of fall wheat sown, and about one half of what was, is ploughed up and resown with other grain. The crops are looking excellent, and a heavy crop of hay may be reasonably expected.

ON the morning of the 24th ult., this ancient little village presented quite a stirring appearance. Early in the morning numerous fishing parties wended their way to that famous trout stream, the Beaver, with success.

Several came all the way from Priceville, a distance of 15 miles. An extensive picnic party from Flesherton and vicinity, bound for Brewster's Lake, also passed through the village. We are sorry to say that some of them at least did not leave a very creditable reputation behind them. Some of the party, especially some whom we should have considered ladies, under other circumstances, displayed their ignorance and immodesty by insulting peaceful citizens whom they chanced to meet on the street.

Nor was this the most. Not being contented with the ample accommodations afforded them by Mr. Tuck, the proprietor of the well-conducted Hotel of this village, some went so far as to carry away sundry articles of the toilet, such as soap, etc., (perhaps they required it.) They also tried to show off their smartness by knotting up towels, etc., found in the room.

We are glad to know that there were some respectable parties in the company who knew how to conduct themselves properly.

MAXWELL, May 30, 1881.

AS Wednesday's mail train was on its way north, the baggage van got off the track about half a mile south of Arnott, and while assisting to put a rope under the car to draw it on again Mr. Watson, of Orangeville, got his arm badly bruised. He was put on a lorry and sent on to Chatsworth, but on arriving there it was found the doctor was away, and they proceeded on to Owen Sound. Of the four doctors of the town only one, we are informed, would go to the poor man's relief. One of them after promising to go in half an hour, and upon being again sent for at the expiration of the time, refused to go at all, saying he was not going to be at the beck and nod of every Tom, Dick and Harry. It appears also that there was a doctor on the train, who sat and looked on, without offering to do anything to alleviate the poor man's suffering. A good deal of indignation at the treatment they received is felt by the train hands.

HOPEVILLE.

From a Correspondent.

IN our neighborhood the farming community are about through with their seeding, and the crops look well. The late rains have had a wonderful effect on vegetation, and in Proton we have every prospects of good crops this season.

The 24th passed off quietly. In the early morning the inhabitants were aroused from their slumbers, by a royal salute from the Anvil Battery, after which most of our inhabitants wended their ways to the various streams in and around here and passed the day in fishing, the village in consequence wore the appearance of Sunday.

Hopeville can boast of a Temperance Society called the Hopkin's Wave, which has for its object the abstaining from all intoxicating liquors as a beverage, which is not patronized by our Publican, but its members, however, can get "Morey Bitters" by giving a peculiar wink to the landlord.

We hear that Hopeville has now a magistrate and constable, which was much needed. We have not heard of a court being held yet.

Our business men here are doing a good business, and our mechanics are all doing a good stroke of work, and we have fair prospects of a good season.

Mr. Geo. Weir, lot 7, con 12, had a very narrow escape from fire, by sparks igniting his roof; but by his own and his neighbors' exertions, it was subdued before much damage was done. George is a plucky little man, and he required all his pluck that time.

THE American Agriculturist for June is to hand. Its contents are varied and useful as usual. WE have received the first number of the Dominion Odd Fellow. It is, as its name would indicate, devoted to the interests of that order. It is a neat, well printed, eight page paper. Published at Napanee by Messrs Templeton & Beeman, at $1 per annum, in advance.

CUT THIS OUT,—Persons handeing bank bills should be careful not to take in any $2 Dominion notes from No. 145,001 to No. 115,000, nor any $1 Dominion notes from No. 355,001 to 356,000 as the Government has refused to redeem them, they being part of the lot stolen from the Rociever-General's office in Toronto some time ago.

ROBBERY.—George Clemens lot 2, 17th Con., Keppel, went to Owen Sound on Thursday of last week, and during his absence some one broke into his house and abstracted therefrom $50 and a doubled barrel shot gun together with $70 belonging to Mrs. Clemens, who was also absent at the time. Suspicion rests upon certain parties, but nothing definate has yet transpired.—Echo.

A CERTAIN young man of our village, and a would-be lady-killer, while out driving with a young lady of a neighboring village, made indecent proposals to her, which were indignantly repulsed. Upon her return home she informed her big brother, who immediately armed himself with revolvers, dirk knives, and sundry other implements of war, determined to annihilate that young man or die in the attempt. Hearing that the man he was after had made a bee line for Markdale, he started in pursuit. Getting into a rig with some others that were bound hitherward, he sat down by the individual he was after, and began narrating to him the errand on which he was bent, showing him a revolver, fully loaded, with which he intended to cut short the career of the gay lothario who had so fearfully insulted his sister. What that young gent's feelings were can better be imagined than described. On the road the brother spied an individual, whom he took to be his man, from the description given by his sister, and immediately jumped out and went for him lively. While he was mopping the road with him the really guilty party made good his escape. How the thing will terminate we can't say, but one thing is evident Markdale has one inhabitant the less.

PERSONAL.

W. F. DOLL, of Flesherton, has gone on a visit to the Old Country. The night previous to his departure, quite a number of the young people of the village met at Mr Richardson's, to wish him a pleasant voyage, and a speedy return. Mr Doll will visit Birmingham, Paris, and other promenent business centres, while gone, anb we believe he intends bringing back a large stock of goods from those places. His business has been placed in the hands of a competant workman during his absence and all orders will be promptly attended to.

W. J. MCFARLAND, Esq., leaves for Europe on Saturday next, for the benefit of his health. No doubt however Mac will keep his eye open during his travels and we expect to have to announce on his return, that he has imported heavily. The business during his absence will be under the supervision of Mr. Bowes. Mr. R. D. Biggar, of Oakville, a former resident, and for some years book-keeper in Mr. McFarland's establishment, will assist Mr. Bowes. With the many other friends of Mr. B. we extend to him a cordial welcome back, and hope his stay among us will be permanent.

Is a compound of the virtues of sarsaparilla, stillingia, mandrake, yellow dock, with the iodide of potash and iron, all powerful blood-making, blood-cleansing, and life-sustaining elements. It is the purest, safest, and most effectual alterative medicine known or available to the public. The sciences of medicine and chemistry have never produced so valuable a remedy, nor one so potent to cure all diseases resulting from impure blood. It cures Scrofula and all scrofulous diseases, Erysipelas, Rose, or St. Anthony's Fire, Pimples and Face-grubs, Pustules, Blotches, Boils, Tumors, Tetter, Humors, Salt Rheum, Scald-head, Ring-worm, Ulcers, Sores, Rheumatism, Mercurial Disease, Neuralgia, Female Weaknesses and Irregularities, Jaundice, Affections of the Liver, Dyspepsia, Emaciation, and General Debility.
By its searching and cleansing qualities it purges out the foul corruptions which contaminate the blood and cause derangement and decay. It stimulates and enlivens the vital functions, promotes energy and strength, restores and preserves health, and infuses new life and vigor throughout the whole system. No sufferer from any disease which arises from impurity of the blood need despair who will give AYER'S SARSAPARILLA a fair trial.
It is folly to experiment with the numerous low-priced mixtures, of cheap materials, and without medicinal virtues, offered as blood-purifiers, while disease becomes more firmly seated. AYER'S SARSAPARILLA is a medicine of such concentrated curative power, that it is by far the best, cheapest, and most reliable blood-purifier known. Physicians know its composition, and prescribe it. It has been widely used for forty years, and has won the unqualified confidence of millions whom it has benefited.

MARRIAGE EXTRAORDINARY

There lives in North Carolina a family notable for nothing, so far as we know, but for an idiosyncratic fondness for being married in unheard of and absurd places. The telegraph has just announced the wedding of the youngest daughter in a clift near Cave creek, one hundred and fifty feet in the air, the place being, old tradition says, an Indian refuge. The father and mother of the romantic young woman took upon themselves the holy bonds of matrimony in a a baloon, which, by the way, became unmanageable before the bridal party came to earth, so that they barely escaped with their lives, passing he bridal night tossing about in a bank of very wet clouds, the bride being deadly sea sick. The eldest son of the family kept up the traditions of his home by wedding his bride in a diving- bell, although in taking a second wife he contented himself with a simple marriage by telegraph. Another son bore home his blushing consort from a marriage in a railroad car; and still a third brother contrived that his wedding should come in as a part of a performance of amateur theatricals, no one besides himself, the bride and the magistrate who performed the ceremony, being in the secret. What bizarre antics the next generation will devise it is difficult to imagine, but at least the fool-catcher need not consider his occupation gone while any of the family remains at large.

RED-HEADED GIRLS

A lady correspondent who ought to know writes from New York to say that red-headed girls are all the rage. Those who have fiery heads by nature now account them selves lucky. Lemon blondes have lost their grip, and black heads join them in envying the reds. Red hair is attainable but with considerable trouble, for bleaching must be followed by dyeing, and the process requires frequent repetition. Moreover, the peculiar complexion that usually accompanies red hair cannot be simulated. It has a clear palid hue for a groundwork (and this might by itself be counterfeited), but on it appear pale, reddish freckles, and to paint them it would be too delicate an operation to undertake. Red hair is becoming common on the streets and in public assemblages, but the real is too easily distinguished from the false that the fashion is not likely to last long. In the matter of hairdressing, while it is no longer correct to ware the hair high on the head and in voluminous puffs, braids and frizzes, as was fashionable only a year ago, it is nevertheless evident that the close, flat style of coiffure is going out of date. Curls and loops are added from week to week, and gradually we are returning to the elaborate style of hairdressing, which is the only one suitable for the complicated details of the general toilet of to-day. When done in red hair, the fussiness is effective. Women with red hair are called "rossas." When attired with taste, they are bewitching—if they have fine complections and eyes blue, gray, dark, brown or bronze-tinted; they should dress in either very dark or very light colors. Grays, drabs, yellows, bright blue, bright green, mauve, lilac, and rose do not become them. They may wisely wear black, dark blue, dark voilet, pearl and cream white, water blue and the palest tints of Nile Green.

NO SECRETS FROM SCIENCE

The doctor arrives at the hospital to make his daily visit of inspection and receives the ticket of a new patient, 'X, musician in German band; pulmonary consumption.'

He proceeds to his patient's beside, surrounded by his admiring class.

'Well, my good fellow, you spit blood, don't you?'

'Yes, doctor; I—'

'That'll do; we know all about it. and you have cold sweats at night, eh?'

'Yes, sir, and—'

'I fancy now by my occupation you are a musician?'

'Yes, I play—'

'Be silent! You belong to a brass band and you have over exerted yourself—have fairly blown your lungs away puffing into your instrument. Gentlemen, you perceive that sickness as no secret from science. What instrument do you play, my good man?'

'The cymbals, sir.

He who is ashamed of his poverty will surely be arrogant in his wealth.

There is hope for a man as long as he can blush.

"So you enjoyed your visit the circus, did you?" inquired a young man of his adored one's little sister. "Oh, yes! And do you know, we saw a camel there that screwed its mouth and eyes around awful; and sister said it looked exactly as you do when you are reading poetry at the evening parties."

HIS CONSCIENCE SMOTE HIM.

'What's the feel'in in this yere office about lendin' me a quarter?' asked an attenuated tramp at the cashier's desk of the Eagle office yesterday afternoon

'There are strong prejudices against it,' returned the cashier;

'Does it go so far as to reach itself to a dime?' inquired the suppliant,

'I think it reaches to that extent, said the cashier.

'You don't appear to recognize me pardner.'

'Well you don't refer to anything of which I have extended information.'

'There's a great deal of money in me, if I'm properly worked. I only need keerful handling.'

'Money in you, how?' asked the cashier becoming interested.

'If I was taken where I belonged there'd be great wealth for us both. I'm priceless in the proper quarter.'

'Give me your address and I'll send you over,' said the cashier.'

'Make it twenty-five cents and I'll give you the information. Put up somethin' as a guarantee of good faith and you've got me. Two bits in cash invested in me will make your eyes hang out.'

'I'll go a quarter on you,' said the cashier, handing over the money. 'Who are you? How's anything to be made out of you?'

'Stranger,' said the grateful tramp bursting into tears: 'stranger, I won't deceive a kind hearted man like you. I was going to tell you that I was Sitting Bull but I ain't; I'm only Alexander T. Stewart's long lost, dead body.

GREAT ANNUAL

CLEARIG SALE,

AT THE

POST OFFICE STORE,

FLESHERTON.

In order to make room for heavy Spring Importations now arriving daily, I have decided reducing my present large and well selected and assorted stock of

GENAERAL DRY GOODS, FURS, MILLIERY,

Ready-Made Clothing,

BOOTS AND SHOES,

Hats, Caps and Groceries

TO THE LOWEST POINT POSSIBLE,

and in order to do so,

Will Sell at and Under COST,

FOR THE NEXT THIRTY DAYS.

The stock is all new, well bought, and well worth the attention of the closet buyers.

In GROCERIES you will find evrything of First-Class Value.

As I do not pursue the course of some of our windy Merchants of our neighboring Villages, of sending out numerous samples of cheap trash (with unscrupolous recommendations) outside our natural business relations, in order to impress the public that they are not properly treated by their more honorable dealers, and draw custom from the many.

You will find everything that I sell just as I represent it, and as good value as you can possibly get for your money anywhere, as I have always held that honorable dealing is the only true course for a business man.

My Groceries are all bought for strictly nett cash, consequently I can and will sell at

The Lowest Possible Prices!

For CASH and FARM PRODUCE

BUT NOT FOR CREDIT.

I have also in stock and for sale, a large quantity of

PURE SEED GRAIN!

Such as White Russian, Glasgow, Red Chaff, and other varieties of Spring wheat. Also Pure Clean Peas, Oats and Barley. Prime Timothy and Clover Seed; also Fresh Garden Seeds, and as it pays each and every Farmer to sow clean seed, you will make money by paying a few cents extra, and purchasing a good article.

I am now selling large quantities of

COARSE LAND SALT,

FOR MANURE,

Which will pay every Farmer Five Dollars for every one invested in it, and as I am anxious that every Farmer in this locality and neighboring Townships shall try it, have decided in selling in five and ten barrel lots at the Lowest Cash Price laid down by the car direct from the Manufacturers, and bought for nett cash at Bottom Prices.

I would also intimate that my

SPRING IMPORTATIONS

ARE ARRIVING DAILY,

And I will have opened out and show

On The 1st of April,

One of the Largest and Best Assorted Stocks ever brought into this part of the country.

Thanking one and all for liberal patronage in the past, and soliciting an inspection befor purchasing elsewhere,

MONEY IS KING.

I am lord of all—the poor—the rich :
The king his throne, the beggar his ditch,
At my behest must loose or hold,
Or, "hey, presto change !" and lo behold
The king's a beggar—the beggar enthroned
Now each in his former state disowned.
Thus my puppet move, as I pulled the string,
For I am Money and Money is King.

In the nation's hall I proudly stand,
For I hold the prize in my good right hand
Of member minster, senator all—
I buy them up both great and small,
I buy their honor, manhood and truth—
They'd sell what they call their souls in sooth
And their empty lives to my feet would bring.
For I am Money and Money is King.

See the maiden of beauty rare—
Her only downer is her golden hair,
A faultless face, a matchless form ;
A heart with human passions warm ;
She'll go to the market where beauty is sold
And barter her fresh young charms for gold.
If the compact's sealed with the marriage ring,
Her buyer is Money, and Money is King.

I buy the love of a maiden or wife,
I buy the stroke of dagger or knife ;
I buy the judge, the jury, the law,
That will find convincement for me a flaw ;
I buy the witness who'll deftly swear
That white is black and black is fair ;
And loud and long will my praises sing,
For I am Money, and Money is King.

IN THE MIDST OF PERIL.

By the Author of "Hidden Quicksands," "A Relentless Foe," "Maggie O'Connor's Fortunes," &c., &c.

Mr. Coghlan had been helping the men to steady the rope, leaning out of the window to do so better.

"He is down !" he exclaimed, after that intense and anxious pause. "The rope flies loose ! But, hark ! An imprecation—a blow ! Good Heaven, he has come down upon a Whiteboy !"

There was a wild possionate cry in the room, and the next moment Glorvina fell into Tim O'Brien's arms, which caught her as she staggered.

"Put her on the bed. O'Brien," said Coghlan in a broken voice. "No wonder she is horror stricken. The poor, brave fellow! Well he has done his best, and we must do ours! Eva, Lily"—turning to his weeping wife and daughter—"see to Glory. But, perhaps, it will be better for her if she never wakes !"

CHAPTER XI.

It was as they had guessed. The tutor had come down upon the head of a Whiteboy, whose garb revealed him even in the darkness of the thick misty night. Happily for Surridge, the blow knocked the man down ; but he sprang instantly to his feet, and, with an imprecation and a shout, rushed at the breathless clergyman. But the tutor parried with great dexterity a blow from a knife, though in doing so he had his left arm cut open from the top to the bottom, and in return levelled his assailant by a well-planted blow which fell—accidentally—between the eyes and stunned him. Then, fearful that the man's shout would in an instant bring his fellows, the tutor fled with his greatest speed towards the meadows. He was right ; he was still in sight when those who had heard their sentinel's cry came to the spot, and the fellow, reviving, pointed to the fugitive.

"He fell on my head," he gasped, "and then knocked me down !"

"Pursue him !" cried the voice of Captain Rock himself—"pursue him if you love your lives, or he will bring the soldiers on us !"

Then, sure that the fugitive would be caught, he turned to the house.

"I would smoke them out, only the fire would be seen by the soldiers and betray us."

Three of the Whiteboys, all swift of foot, had started in pursuit of the flying tutor. He had had the start by three or four mintes, but he did not know the path so well as they did, and besides, he was bleeding fearfully from his wound. He began to feel faint and exhausted, and could already hear their approaching footsteps. Happily for him the night was cloudy and misty. Just as he felt that the race was nearly over, something dark seemed to obstruct his path. He came right up against it, and found it was a huge pig-sty. And now the steps were nearer and the voices audible.

"I will not be butchered," he murmured, leaping over the fence of the sty with the last effort of his strength, and creeping into it. A monstrous sow and her little ones, disturbed by his entrance, grunted and moved in their sleep. The tutor crept under her huge side, pulled the straw litter over him, and fainted.

Meanwhile the pursuers, keeping the straight path, which was well known to them, passed the sty without a thought of the shelter it afforded their destined victim, and paused only when the barracks loomed in sight.

"He has got there !" gasped the foremost one.

"And the sodgers will be upon us in no time !" cried another. "Hark ! What's that sound ?"

And, turning, all three fled back at their best speed.

"There is the farm," said one ; "can he have gone in there ?"

"Pooh ! Nancy wouldn't harbour him, and the dog would have given notice if he had gone into the yard."

As he spoke, a lattice near them opened, and a girl's head appeared.

"What is it buoys ?" asked a low voice.

"We are afther the heretic parson, Kathleen. He's gone to rouse the sodgers, and has got away from us. Is he in the yard, think ye ?"

"The dog wouldn't let him in," she replied.

"Oh, but the dog knows him ! Here, come and open the gate ; we'd best look for him !"

"Ay," she said, "I'll be out in a minute."

And she soon appeared an' let them in, hushing the great mastiff that guarded the farm. They searched cowhouse and loft ; but there was no sign of human being. The girl let them out and walked a little way with them down the lane. As they passed the pig-sties one of them said—

"Can he be in there ?"

"Faith no, Terence," replied the girl. "The ould sow would soon let ye know if he was."

"Good night, then mavourneen," said the man. "He's reached the barracks, and we must be off at once and get away."

"Good night," returned the girl ; and, as they ran off at full speed, she muttered, "And its glad I am ye never found him. Ye shouldn't have harmed him though, if ye had."

As the girl passed the sty on her way back, a deep groan startled her.

"Holy Virgin save us !" she cried, crossing herself. "What's that ?"

And then, with a sudden suspicion, she hastened into the house, got a lantern, and went back to the sty, stirring up the great sow, who, in moving and lying on the tutor's wounded arm, had brought back his senses by the pain. Underneath her on the straw lay the pale and bleeding man. He opened his eyes, recognised her, and murmured—

"Kathleen, save me !"

"And it's save ye I will, poor darlint !" said the warm-hearted drudge ; and, crawling into the sty, she soon discovered the wounded arm, tore her petticoat into strips, and bound it up deftly. "Now," she said, "crawl out if you can ;" and with her assistance, he did so. But was very weak. "Sit ye still on the straw," she said kindly, "and I'll bring ye drop of whiskey That'll soon set ye up ; and I'll hide ye till daylight."

She placed him on a heap of straw, and, scarcely listening to his feeble thanks, hurried off to the house, never thinking that he could move alone, or she would not have left him. But she was scarcely out of sight when, with a mighty effort, he raised himself and went staggering on to the barracks.

The whiskey had to be taken from a cupboard, the key of which was, happily, lost, and Kathleen was some time finding it. When she returned with the glass of the "craythur," as she called it, her patient was gone.

"The buoys have returned and found him !" she sighed. "Poor sowl; it's sorry Kathleen is for you !" And with a heavy heart, the girl went back to the house.

Thus unmolested, the tutor—to whom even the girl would now have been a formidable foe—staggered on to the barrack gate and gave the alarm. His message was barely told before he fell again insensible at the sentry's feet.

CHAPTER XII., AND LAST.

The inmates of the Priory were in deadly peril. The first door took longer to break open than the hall-door had ; it yielded at last however, shivered to pieces by the axes of the rebels. But, when they found that the next door, and the next, demanded the same labor, they were infuriated. There was a cry several times of "Burn it down !" but their captain interfered.

"The ould wood would burn like tinder," he said, and the sodgers would see the flames. Besides, we've promised to save Miss Desmond, who is one of us, and we will. Work on with a will, boys !"

But they began to think it strange that the pursuers had not returned, and the captain grew uneasy. The fourth door was down, but there were five others ; and every moment, if the tutor had escaped, placed their necks in jeopardy. Still the men's blood was up ; obstacles only roused and infuriated them, and the captain knew that he dared not order a retreat. The fifth door took still longer to break open ; the sixth, which was wedged, was almost immovable, and the axes had to cut through the panel low down for the arm to go through and remove it. The doors were of a thickness not dreamed of in modern times ; and thus the rebels had only just broken open the last but one after two hours' toil. In the meantime the pursuers had come back and warned them of danger approaching ; but the men, growing more and more dogged as the resistance opposed to them was more provoking, would not heed.

The inmates were in the last room. Glorvina had revived, and now sat pale, mute, as if turned to stone, Eva trying to arouse her. Mrs. Coghlan, clasping her little ones to her beating heart, wept silently. Tim O'Brien stood with folded arms leaning against the wall and gazing at Glorvina with a sort of sullen despair. He—perhaps he alone—had read her swoon aright.

And now the crashes, the imprecations, the sound of hideous voices, drew nearer and nearer, and the party could at last distinguish the cries of "We will have their hearts' blood !"

There was a nearer, louder crash, than a blow on the last door, which seemed to fall on Mrs. Coghlan's heart as her little Norah screamed with childish affright. The sound, revealing how near the assailants had drawn to their victims, and hailed with a shout of fiendish glee from the Whiteboys.

"Here they are, buoys, at last !" cried a voice.

Then something was muttered.

"And that's true for you ; it'll save time," replied the stentorian tones of Captain Rock. "Hillo, Misther O'Brien ; are ye there ?"

Tim made no answer. But Glorvina, starting to sudden life in her care for others, answered loudly—

"Yes, Mr. O'Brien is here."

"Then bid him open the door for his friends."

She turned and confronted Tim. The traitor's head dropped beneath her glance of scorn.

"It was for your sake," he murmured.

"Traitor !" was her reply.

But his friends outside were impatient.

"Now look you, Tim O'Brien," said the same commanding voice, "I order you by your oath to open this door, and cause no more delay, which is risky for you and us. Open at once, or—you know the forfeit."

The coward actually moved to obey; but Glorvina threw herself across his path and stood with back to the door.

"You shall kill me first, vile traitor!" she said.

Perhaps Tim would have used his strength and moved his slight opponent from his path, but Coghlan, who had been stunned by grief and indignation, suddenly seized him and pulled him down. Murphy flew to his master's assistance, and the footman, with ready intelligence, drew out his knife, cut off pieces of the alarm rope, and bound Tim hand and foot, he making scarcely any resistance.

"Will you open ?" again shouted Captain Rock. "Obey at once, or you shall die with these traitors of Ireland!"

"I am bound hand and foot," muttered Tim.

"And we are saved !" shrieked Eva. "The Hussars—the Hussars !"

Yes, there was the gallop of horses and the sound of the trumpet !

Captain Rock threw down his axe with an imprecation. He and the Whiteboys had heard the approaching horsemen, and they at once made off. But escape was not easy now.

Guided by a handkerchief which Eva waved from the window to their friends, the soldiers came right on the Whiteboys, and there was a hand-to-hand fight. A few broke through the Hussars and got away ; but half or more of the band were taken, and were finally bound and confined in the lower rooms of the house on the north side.

Then Captain Leicester knocked at the door to tell the family they were safe, and to ask admission. He entered looking flushed.

"You are safe ; I am thankful to say," he announced.

Mr. Coghlan wrung his hand, while Mrs. Coghlan and her daughter could only thank him by their tears. The relief from that agony was almost too much to bear. His eyes lingered tenderly on Eva ; but it was Glorvina who came to him and laid her hand on his arm, saying in a strangely hoarse voice—

"How did you know ?"

"That brave fellow Surridge brought the tidings," he replied. "He came covered with blood and could only say. 'Whiteboys at the Priory ! Ride, for life or death rests on your speed!' We needed no other bidding."

"He is not dead ?" she asked with white lips.

"I really can't say. He was carried in and the doctor went to him. I hope he will live."

Then suddenly his eyes fell upon the bound form of O'Brien.

"Mr. O'Brien !" he exclaimed in amazement.

Coghlan glanced down at the prostrate traitor.

"Yes, this gentleman," he said bitterly, "was a friend and ally of the Whiteboys. He was—I believe I have good grounds for thinking so—kind enough to cut the rope of the alarm-bell at the time he was enjoying my hospitality, thus insuring our destruction had not my son's tutor risked his life for us."

"Then he must consider himself my prisoner," said Leicester haughtily ; and leaving the room, he soon returned with two or three of his soldiers, to whose charge he committed the detected traitor.

The exhausted family descended with him to the drawing-room. Murphy received orders to give the soldiers the best food and drink the house supplied. Refreshments were also brought to the chilled and weary ladies and children, and then Mr. Coghlan suggested that they should go to bed.

"Sleep sweetly," whispered Leicester to Eva, as she said 'Good morning,' —for day was drawing near, though it was not yet light. "We watch over your safety."

Mrs. Coghlan, Eva, and the wearied children were soon wrapped in slumber.

Not so Glorvina. She had known

PROOF OF ANIMAL LIFE IN OTHER PLANETS

Two interesting problems which have long preplexed the scientific appear to have been at last definitely solved by the eminent geologist, Dr. Hahn. These questions are, first, whether or not celestial bodies, other than the earth, belonging to our solar system are inhabited by animate beings, and secondly, whether the meteoric stones from time to time cast upon the surface of this globe emanate from incandescent comets or from volcanic planets. That they at no time formed a part of the earth itself has been conclusively demonstrated. Dr. Hahn has recently completed a series of envestigations upon some of the huge meteoric stones that fell from the skies in Hungary during the summer of 1866. Thin laminæ of these mysterious bodies, subjected to examination under a powerful microscope, have been found to contain corralline and spongeous formations, and to reveal unmistakeable traces of the lower forms of vegetation. All the organisms, animal and vegetable, discovered by Dr. Hahn in the delicate stone shavings he has thus dealt with indicate the condition of their parent world to be one of what is technically termed "primary formation.' But the presence of water in that world is proved by the fact that the tiny petrified creatures revealed by the magic of the lens one and all belong to the so-called subaqueous classes of animals. They could not have existed in comets, at least if the assumption be corrected that these are in a state of active combustion.—London Telegraph.

BUYING HIS NEIGHBOUR'S WIFE.

(FROM THE INDIANAPOLIS JOURNAL.)

In Jackson township, Decatur county a bachelor bought a neighbor's wife of her impecunious husband for $100, with the understanding that the latter was to retain charge of the two children. He then sold his farm and went west, taking his purchase along.

HUNTING ON THE PLAINS.

It is estimated by competent authorities that 100,000 buffalo hides will be shipped out of the Yellowstone country this season. Two firms alone are negotiating for the transportation of 25,000 hides each. When to this is added the immense amount of skins and furs of other kinds—deer, elk, antelope bear, beaver &c.,—some idea may be formed of the extent of the Yellowstone pelt and fur trade.

Most of our citizens saw the big load of buffalo hides that the C. K. Peck brought down last season, a load that hid everything about the boat below the hurricane deck roof. There was 10.000 hides in that load and they were all brought off the Yellowstone on one trip and transferred to the C. K. Peck. How such a load could have been pilled on the little Ferry not even the men on the boat appeared to know. It hid every part of the boat, passing only the pilot house and smoke-stacks. But such a load will not be attempted again. For such boats as ply the Yellowstone there are at least fifteen full loads of buffalo hides and other pelts. Reconing 1.000 hides to three car loadsand adding to this fifty cars for the pelts it will take at least 320 box cars to cary this stupendous bulk of peltry east to market. These figures are not guesses, but estimates made by men whose business is to know about the amount of hides and furs awaiting shipment.

Nothing like it has ever been known in the history of fur trade. Last season the out-put of buffalo hides was came out of the Yellowstone country, or less than a third of what is there now awaiting shipment.
about the average, and last year only about 80,000 hides

The past severe winter caused the buffalo to bunch themselves in a few valleys where there was pasturage, the slaughter went on all winter There was no sport about it, simply shooting down the famine tamed animals as cattle might be shot in a barnyard.

To the credit of the Indians it can be said that they killed no more than they could save the meat from. The grater part of the slaughter was done by white hunters, or butchers rather, who followed the business of killing and skinning buffalo by the month, leaving the carcasses to rot. When the buffalo are all killed off, as they bid fair to be in a very few years at this rate, then everybody will wonder that the Government did not do something to preserve this, the noblest of animal game, or at least prevent the killing of the buffalo for the hides alone.—Sioux City Journal.

ROYALTY AT HOME.

HOW THE PRINCESS OF WALES SEES TO THE BRINGING UP OF HER DAUGHTERS —A FAMILY GROUP.

Every morning at 9 o'clock the three daughters of the Princess of Wales take their music lesson. They have "mamma" waked up, who, a few moments later, appears in her dressing-gown, and remains with them till the lesson is over. Nothing interests the Princess more than the education of her daughters. In music she can fully appreciate their progress, being herself a consummate musician. Her delicate, dreamy, thoroughly Danish nature betrays itself in her touch. She dotes, above all, on the melodies of Chopin and Schumann, and she plays them with wonderful talent. The three young Princesses, Louise, Victoria and Maud, differ as greatly in character as in physiognomy. The eldest, Louise, has the fine features and the grace of her mother ; she is gentle, gay and affable, in short the Parisienne of the three. Victoria, the second daughter, is the image of her father. She is proud, rather reserved, and attaches herself little to people. When she does grow fond of some one, however, her affection never wavers. She unites to a thorough consciousness of her own dignity a generous heart, easily moved. Her intellect, which is greatly developed, only renders her the more engaging. The youngest sister, Princess Maud, can still be called a baby. She is but ten years of age. In appearance she bears a great likeness to her grandmother, the Queen. She is good hearted, and at times even a little serious. The private apartments of the Princess of Wales, both at Sandringham and at Marlborough House, are fitted up completely in French style. One would believe oneself transported to a mansion in the Champs Elysees. Scattered about everywhere on plush-covered tables are an infinity of knick-knacks, such as small porcelain dogs, bird cages with stuffed birds, figures in Dresden china, tiny flower stands of Faience or Sevres, inkstands, knives and what not, just as in the shops of the Rue de la Paix. The Princes' writing paper always comes from Paris, as well as her dressingtables and all the latest fashionable baubles. Her different pieces of furniture are surrounded by low sreens, which in many cases she herself has embroidered. Many objects in ivory, enamel, silver and mother-of-peral recall Prince "Bertie's" voyage to India.

A commercial traveller from Boston, having had a run of hard luck in prosecuting business, received from his firm the following exhilirating despatch ; "If you can't make expenses, come home at once." To which he sent the following reply: "All right. Can make plenty of expenses, but no sales."

"MEASURING THE BABY."

Don't measure the baby ! There is an old superstition that if you do it will die before the year is out, and it's always best to be on the safe side. Do you see that name written in lead pencil on the door-casing ? Well, that's were we measured the baby. If you get down on your knees you will be able to read, "Jim, just so high." It wasn't a year ago that we all came out here, father, mother, and the girls and got down on the grass and stood him up there. He was a right to look at—all pink and white, with the softest rings of hair and eyes like violets in the spring, and he'd laugh and tumble down and we'd all laugh and cheer him up again, and Jennie had the pencil on his head and scratched the wall, and then we wrote that to mark the spot, but I've wished many a time since I'd never had it done. You see we had been reading some poetry verses about that very thing and it just fitted to our baby exactly in the beginning :

"We measure the riotous baby
Against the cottage wall,
A lilly grew on the threshold,
And the boy was just as tall."

That was so like our baby that I cut the verse out, and pasted it in the blank leaf of the big Bible. Then Jennie said there were more verses that suited him, but after getting the full drift of the poetry, I most wished we hadn't seen it, but I took two more verses and let them go with the others here they are:

"His eyes were wide as blue bells,
(That's like Jim exactly ?)
His mouth like a flower unblown :
(That's him again).
Two little bare feet, like funny white mice,
Peeped out from his snowy gown.

"And we thought with a thrill of rapture,
And yet had a touch of pain,
When June rolls round with her roses
We'll measure the boy again."

Now, if it had stoped there, as I expected it would, I'd have nothing to say and there'd be another mark on the door casing "as much higher," but—but—well what's the use of beating about the bush in this way. You see there's no mark there, and it wasn't any superstitition after all. I went to-day into the room where he lay, all white and peaceful like and so still that it was a sin to cry and disturb his sleep, and I added the rest of the poetry, that Jennie has kept without knowing why, to the old Bible.

"We measured the sleeping baby with ribbons white as snow,
For the shining rosewood casket
That waited him below.

And on of the darkened chamber
We went with a childless moan
To the height of the sinless angles
Our little one had grown."

That tells the story of little Jim better than I can tell it ; that is why there's a hush over all the house, and the sun is to bright, and the birds have stopped singing, and we can neaver again measure the baby, for he has gone "so high" that we can only reach him dy the golden ladder of death.

WOMAN AS PREACHERS.

WHO SUCCEEDED AND WHO FAIL—OBSTACLES IN THE WAY.

The Universalist and Unitarian theological schools admit women, but so far no young women have gone into the pulpit from them. There are, however, a number of young women who are pursuing theological studies in Methodist Schools. among the successful women preachers who are married are Mrs Van Cott, Mrs. Amanda Smith and Mrs. Willing. Miss Sarah Smiley, Miss Vincent, of Boston, and Phœbe Hanaford have been before the public for years. The Rev. Mrs. Ellen Gustin, of Massachusetts, is an ordained preacher in the denomation in which President Garfield was formerly a preacher, and is pastor of a church. Referring to the fate of Miss Mary Phillips, one of the girl preachers said: "I dont wonder she died, for the opposition we meet is enough to kill any one who is not kept alive miraculously by the lord."

"Are girl preachers popular ?' was asked.

'With aged people, middle-aged married couples, youths and misses they are popular. With wife-hunting men, old bachelors, or men in love, and with young women looking for husbands, or those in love, they are not popular. Spinsters, however, greatly admire them, and to some extent envy them for the independence of their position, matrimonially considered, and the respect they exact serves to make their positions enviable to those having been disappointed. The life of a girl who is preparing for the ministry is one of self-denial as to dress and fashion, theatres, and worldly amusements, and it is difficult nowadays in cities to pass through such an ascetic existence outside of a convent. But women know that conscience and duty call them as loudly as they call men, and that happiness comes only with obeying Our comfort to the sick and dying, our sympathy with the afflicted, our simple life and habits give us place in the hearts of our parishoners. One preacher said to me that wherever men could behold the spectacle of vestal virgins dedicated to God they were more moved than by a thousand sermons.'

Do not drug the system with nauseous purgatives that only debilitate. Burdock Blood Bitters is natures own Cachartic, it acts at once upon the Bowels, the Skin, the Liver and the Kidneys, arousing all the secretions to a healthy action. It purifies the Blood and cures all Humors, even the worst form of Scrofula, and tones up the Nervous and Debilitated.

"How do you like my spring clothes ?" asked Leander. "Pretty well," replied Hero, doubtfully, and then added, "but I think I should like you better in a walking suit." He sat wrapped in silent thought for about five minutes, and then got up and walked slowly away in the suit he had on.

destroyed in many places. The fruit crop, which up to the last week promised so favorably, is completely ruined it is said. In many places it is reported that ice formed to the thickness of half an inch and in the county of Lennox the ground was frozen to the depth of half an inch. In the Gatineau district some of the farmers have commenced to replant so great has been the damage. We believe nothing approaching the severity of this visitation has been Experienced since the year 1831.

DUNDALK.

(Written specially for the STANDARD.)

THERE is no philanthropic Irishman who may chance to see the above name, but will revert his mind back to the bygone days of yore, when he will remember the beautiful little seaport town in the Emerald Isle.

Many a heart has felt glad at the name of Dundalk, and many more will enquire where this Dundalk is situated, and what connections it has with the old seaport town. But the Dundalk we wish to call your attention to is situated on the line of the Toronto, Grey & Bruce Railway in the County of Grey, being 28 miles north of Orangeville, 40 miles south [of] Owen Sound, 12 miles north of Shelburne, and 12 miles south of Flesherton. Situated on the boundary line between the Townships of Proton and Melancthon, we look upon [Dund]alk as being centrally located for business, for by taking the four points of the compas, any man, with any degree of calculation, will at once see that there is a large area of country to support the village of Dundalk. There are no other markets or villages on the north or south nearer than twelve miles, and on the east and west nearer than thirty miles. Consequently Dundalk is bound to go ahead of its rivals.

In proof of this fact, when we remember [that] only eight years ago, the [spot u]pon which Dundalk stands to-[day was] in a dense wilderness, hav-[illegible] the Waterous bush saw [illegible] over with a few boards [illegible] poles, surrounded [illegible] Doyle, [illegible] Beatty entered into a speculation, having purchased over 200 [acres] [illegible] block, upon which [illegible] village plot and named [it] [illegible] Dundalk, which is a [illegible] the love they had for the [illegible] their ancestors.

Dundalk has steadily increased both in business and population, so that to-day it can boast of its 800 inhabitants. [The] business places we will enumerate in the following manner, which may be of interest to the many readers of the STANDARD, viz: Two gristing and flouring mills, three good saw mills in [illegible] which must be [illegible] proof of the building [illegible] going on in Dundalk and [illegible] store [illegible] by J[illegible] Dean [illegible] of [illegible] state, cabinet [illegible] wagon shops, [illegible] and retail [illegible] and commer[illegible] [illegible] Dr. Mc[illegible] [illegible] Mr. [illegible] and [illegible] to the prosperity [illegible] manner in which they [illegible], and last but not least, [the edu]cational department of Dundalk [is] worthy of note, which is superintended by Mr. Potter, assisted by [illegible]. Due credit to the in[habit]ants of Dundalk for the substan[tial] [churches] they have erected, namely, [illegible] Methodist, Presbyterian [and] [illegible] Churches. Under the [illegible] of the Rev. Mr. Potter [illegible] Methodist church has [illegible] [illegible] their church, which [illegible] will give ample room and [illegible] all.

When we recapitulate and review the business facilities of Dundalk, with its numerous occupations, we are compelled to acknowledge its rapid growth during the few years of its existence. And from a personal knowledge, we know there is a splendid opening in Dundalk for several manufacturing establishments, such as an oatmeal mill, foundry, machine shop, planing [mill], [illegible] factory, cheese factory, [illegible] and several other [branch]es of business which could be carried on to good advantage, and [illegible] it is now definitely de[cided] [to] [illegible] the gauge of the T., G. & B. Railway and [illegible] to the standard broad gauge, the track to be laid with steel rails from end to end, which will give open commerce to every branch of industry, and will be a safe guarantee for good investments in the new Town of Dundalk.

We desire to congratulate the business men of Dundalk on having been successful in sustaining their business and reputations, without one exception, through the business crisis of the past three years—now they bid fair to success.

In our next we will give notice of our Railway Station and market facilities, and give a further sketch of the surroundings of Dundalk and show from whence it derives its support.

TO KINGSTON AND BACK.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

Perhaps a short account of our visit to the late P. M. Conference held in the ancient City of Kingston, may be of some interest to some of your readers. The Conference time is always, more or less, a time of interest to Methodists, especially to the preachers, therefore it was with a mixture of emotions that we found ourselves starting upon our conferential journey.

The first thing that struck our attention after leaving Markdale was the comfort of the car in which we journeyed which far exceeded our expectations after all that we had heard of the Narrow Guage. But this feeling soon gave place to an interest in the crops as we caught glimpses of them by the road side. Though the fall wheat appears to be badly injured, the spring crops are very forward, especially as we drew near to the city and we were not astonished to find as we were returning that both rye and wheat had shot out in head. Arrived in the City we were surprised at the wonderful advances that had been made since our last visit, but as our visit was necessarily short, we could not do more than give it a passing glance. We were reminded by the grocery windows that we had left the north behind, for green cucumbers, green peas, ripe tomatoes, and strawberries everywhere stared us in the face, and tempted our appetites so much so that a good brother with whom we journeyed treated to strawberries and cream. Now, behold about forty of us comfortably seated on board the good steamer Armenia steaming out upon the beautiful waters of Lake Ontario, and what with a good boat, a genial captain, courteous crew, jolly company, and the lake like a mill-pond for calmness, we had a really enjoyable trip. A pleasing feature of which was an impromptu entertainment held from 8 to 10 in the evening in the main cabin consisting of speeches, recitations and singing, after which divine worship was conducted by one of the elder brethren; and we all re[tired] to our staterooms for a comfort[able] night's repose. Early morning found us off "the Ducks," and by 8 o'clock we were all safely landed in the ancient yet beautiful City of Kingston.

In approaching Kingston from the [lake] the first object of interest that [meets the eye] is the beautiful Asylum for the Insane, next the strong walls and massive buildings of the Penitentiary. Now our attention is called to the round martel towers which dot the bay and the shores of the islands, and from which together with Fort Henry, there frown down upon any invading [foe] the black mouths of many threatening cannon. We might just say that B battery 120 men Royal Canadian Artillery are stationed here at present, and that the training college [for] military cadets is situate here, but [illegible] said when looking at [one of] the Armstrong gun, "what a good thing it is that we can let these dogs [sleep] [illegible] may they never awake in anger."

Among the many churches with which Kingston is blessed, the largest and most handsome is, of course, the Roman Catholic Cathedral of St. Mary's, which is capable of seating 1,480 people with standing room for [illegible] more. It is very beautifully decorated with paintings and images, of the various Saints especially her to whom it is dedicated. All of whom to our sorrow we found were objects of worship, and not Him who died to save us. Next in order is St. Peter's Anglican Cathedral, we were not privileged to view the interior, but from the outside [we] [were] impressed that it was a grand church. Next in size was St. Andrew's, the leading Presbyterian church of the city. Among the Methodist Churches of the city the new M. E. Church is the largest and best finished. It is a new church, which cost some three years ago $25,000, there are several other churches, as many denominations are represented in the city, but we have not time for a description.

Our Conference has been one of much harmony, and while there has been many changes this year, still we trust all has been done with a desire to glorify the master whom we serve. Immediately upon the Conference being opened and organized a telegram of sympathy was ordered to be sent to the Mayor of London, expressing the sympathy and sorrow felt by the Conference for the terrible calamity that had overtaken the inhabitants of that city. On Sabbath the various pulpits of the city were filled by ministers of the conference. On Tuesday the third reading of the stations was reached, but owing to the division of the work and the taking up of new work, they had to be returned once more to the committee. When a final reading was reached, among the removals we notice that the Rev. C. C. Garnett, goes from Markdale to Gravenhurst, and the Rev. J. S. Corcoran, of Grand River, comes here, also the Rev. P. Flint, who formerly laboured here, removes from Toronto 4th to Pickering, the Rev. W. Walker goes to McGillivaray West, and the Rev. S. Fisher, of McGillivaray, takes his place here.

Though we much desired to visit our Provincial Prison, other affairs so much engaged our attention that we found no opportunity, though several of the brethren did, so much so, that on Monday afternoon the President of the Conference was led to ask "Where are the delegates?" and received for an answer, "In the Penitentiary!" We must just say one word in conclusion, that it has never been our lot to attend a Conference that was more royally entertained than the late Conference at Kingston, and as the Pastor of the Kingston church said, the only difficulty was to find delegates to put into the Homes offered by the friends of the city of all denominations.

After another very enjoyable voyage and pleasant ride upon the much-abused "Narrow Guage," we found ourselves at home again on Thursday evening, having spent a very enjoyable time.

Yours &c.,

C. C. G.

SIR,—A great deal has been said and written of late in reference to the affairs of the Glenelg Ag. Society, its management, &c., and apparently one man is made the "Scapegoat," and has to bear all the odium of whatever mismanagement or embezzlement of the funds which has been going on. Now, I ask, how it came to pass that when an investigation was ordered, that the investigation committe was restricted to the time Mr. Lyons was Treasurer? Why not go back to the beginning and make the investigation thorough and complete? I look upon the whole affair as partial and invidious; had the investigation been made to cover the whole time of the Society's existence, Mr. Lyons would have had no cause of complaint, and if every thing has been conducted on the "Square," all along, such investigation would harm no one, but would greatly strengthen the Society and restore it to the confidence of the public.

FLESHERTON.

From a Correspondent.

The Simple Simon that asked, "who is he?" that wrote the correspondence, is simple indeed, to make an assertion that your correspondent was not acquainted with the roads. He appears to make the statement in regard to the passibleness of the roads from what some one has been telling him. He uses the word "we," surely the Council would not have the assurance to say that the roads are in repair at all, what was said was true, and the half as not yet been told; and if you want to hear it in a more comprehensive manner, you can have it. The crossing is far worse than stated, and the gentleman alluded to in my last got so thoroughly drenched, that the money in his vest pocket was wet; and go on to the next two bridges, and you will find them little better,—holes in both of them. Turn and go to the station, and behold the centre of the road, instead of being the highest, is the lowest in nearly all cases, with the water coursing down the middle of it, in fact it is hard to tell whether it is a gravel road or not. See the state of the 140th side road, and by Plew's mill it is fearful, the corduroy ribs stick up and out, the deviation is shunned by most people; the same state of roads is to be found in Tyrone and up Mr. Buskin's line, where three rails constitute a culvert, and the farmers were under the necessity of repairing the road with stones. At the time the man got his team swamped, the pathmaster was ordered out, and he left it in pretty much the same condition, save putting a few round stones into a rotten, tumble-down hemlock crossway. Some of our old-countrymen would confer a favor on your correspondent if they would give our Council a hint in your next issue how the leading roads are kept up in the Old Country.

Our monthly fair was well attended by buyers, who were anxious to purchase at top prices, but the class of cattle was not good or many in number. The farm implement men took advantage of the gathering to introduce their wares, but the frost the previous night daunted the farmers from purchasing largely.

I have only two births to report this week, but hope to be able to send in a long list shortly.

WE learn from the Owen Sound Tribune, that an attempt at robbery was made on Saturday night last. The burglar entered the residence of Mr. John Dobbin, and made his way up two flight of stairs, to the room of Mr. J. Brown, of Wrights flour & feed store. After rifling his pockets of some $6 in change, he got possession of the keys of the store and safe, and then took his departure for the store. Something must have interfered with his plans as nothing was missed next morning. That the burglar had been to the place was evident from the fact that several partly consumed matches were found at the door. A valuable watch and chain was hanging on the bedpost, but escaped the notice of the pilferer. The robber must have been an old hand or the people in the house must have been heavy sleepers, as not a soul was disturbed, and knew nothing of it until next morning, when Mr. Brown's pants were found in the basement, where they had been left.

A number of Dominion land surveyors left Ottawa last night for the North-West to lay out Townships.

Magistrates' Court.

BEFORE MESSRS. BROWN, STRUTHERS, HAMILTON, AND ELLIOTT.

ED. SARGENT VS. MATILDA GREENAWAY.

WE give this week a full report of a case of assault tried before the above Justices, we, as a rule, would prefer not giving details of such cases; but as a good deal of interest has been taken in this trial, and having been requested to do so, we have departed from our usual course and give it in detail. The trial came off on the 28th ult.

EDWARD SARGENT, complainant, sworn, said—On the evening of the 25th ult., I was on my way home from my father's to my own place. I had been helping my father that day to dig a cellar; on my way home I met Robert Clark, who told me to beware, as the peacemaker was ahead of me. I knew who he meant as Mrs. Greenaway, my wife and sisters were ahead of me, and I hurried on to catch up to them. After I had caught up to my wife and sisters, we met Mrs. Greenaway, the defendant. She stopped me and said, "You denied that to me." I said I did not deny it, she then told me I was a d——nation liar. My sister and my wife then took hold of my arm to pull me away, telling me not to talk with her at all; she, Mrs. Greenaway, then said to my sister "to go home for a dirty bitch." I then said to her, "'Tilda, she is no more a b—h than you are," with that she picked up a stone and struck me on the head with it. I was stunned, and nearly fell. I threw myself against her to prevent her picking up a second one, which she was trying to do. When she was getting up again she tried to pick up another stone, and my wife went around and tried to take the stone out of her hand. My wife told her "for God sake, go home and have peace;" with that Mr. Greenaway, her husband, came up. Mrs. Greenaway told her husband that I called her a "b—h;" but I called her no more of a b—h than she had called my sister. She, Mrs. Greenaway, then said to my wife that she was sorry for her getting into such a thieving, wh—ing, b—hing family as we were; she also said that only for my wife she would lay me a corpse on the road. She called all manner of scandalous names to and at myself and my sisters. The blow raised a lump on my head, and my neck was stiff the next day.

Cross-examined by defendant's Counsel—All that I have stated is correct. There was something farther occurred when her husband came up. She, Mrs. G., picked up another stone and dared me to come on, while her husband was present. Nothing farther occurred that I can recollect now. I understood that the word "Peacemaker" used by Mr. Clark applied to Mrs. Greenaway, as she generally went by that name in the neighborhood. The word "That" applied to a story she had charged me with telling in reference to the manner she, Mrs. Greenaway had treated her girl. Mrs. G. called me a liar before I called her a d——d liar. She called my sister a b——h and a wh—e. I did not call Mrs. G. a b——h; I said my sisters were no more b——hes than she was. The stone hurt me. I threw myself against her to prevent her picking up a second stone, in this way I knocked her down. I neither struck or kicked her.

MARY ANN SARGENT, sworn—I am wife of the complainant, Edward Sargent. On Wednesday evening last, in company with two of my sisters-in-law, were on our way home to our place from my father-in-law's where my husband was helping them to work. On our way Mrs. Greenaway passed us, after a little, Mrs. Greenaway, who had turned, was coming back, and we met her. My husband, in the meantime, caught up to myself and sisters-in-law, and we were all four together when we met Mrs. Greenaway. Mrs. Greenaway accused my husband of telling some story; my husband denied it; she then called him an infernal liar; my husband called her a d—d liar in return; she then hit him with a stone. He, my husband, pushed her from us, as she was trying to pick up another stone. I caught her by the arm, and begged her not to strike him; she then turned to me and said she was sorry for me getting into such a wh——sh, thieving family. My husband told her that his sisters were no bigger wh—s than she was. Mrs. Greenaway's husband came up at this time. I was so much excited that I hardly know what was said. Mr. G. said he would find some one to fix my husband for them. She, Mrs. Greenaway picked up another large stone, and I took it from her; she said only for me she would lay my husband out a corpse. I did not see my husband strike her; I don't think he could have done so without me seeing it.

Cross-examined by defendant's Counsel—The first I heard was Mrs. Greenaway accusing my husband of telling some stories; my husband denied it; Mrs. G. called him an infernal liar; my husband called her a d—d liar. She then picked up a stone and struck my husband. My husband pushed her from him, and I think she stumbled to the ground. She picked up a stone a second time and I tried to get the stone from her; my husband pushed her down a second time. Mr. Greenaway then came up. He said he would find a man who would fix my husband for this. Mrs. Greenaway picked up a third stone while her husband was there, I took it from her and begged her for God sake to have peace. My husband did not punch her against the ground.

CHARLOTTE SARGENT, sworn, said—On Wednesday evening last, my brother, his wife, and myself were going up the road toward my brother's place, when we met Mrs. Greenaway, who asked my brother if he had told some stories; he said he did not; she said he did; he again denied it; she then called him an infernal liar; my brother called her a d—d liar. I took my brother by the arm and asked him to come away, and not quarrel with her. She then turned upon me and called me all sorts of names. My brother told her his sisters were no more what she called them than she, Mrs. G., was. She then struck him with a stone. He said d—n you, would you strike me? and shoved her back. She picked up another stone, and was going to strike him, and he shoved her over again. She picked up a third stone; my sister-in-law went in between them and took the stone out of her hand. She, Mrs. Greenaway, said to my sister-in-law that she was sorry she got into such a thievish, wh——sh crew. Her husband came up then. Mr. G. said he would find somebody to pay back for that.

Cross-examined by defendant's Counsel—My brother said his sisters were no more wh—es than she was. I did not hear my brother call her a d——d wh——e. He pushed her down. She picked up a second stone, and he pushed her down again. She picked up a third stone. I did not see my sister-in-law help Mrs. Greenaway up. I did at first want my brother to come away and not disgrace himself with her. I never spoke to her myself on the occasion.

MATILDA GREENAWAY, sworn, said—A few days before the occurrence, my father said that Edward Sargent had told my sister-in-law, Mrs. Clark, that I had struck my girl Mary and threw her out. I felt very angry at this, as I had never struck or ill-used the girl in my life, and I purposed asking Ed. the first chance about it. On the morning of the occurrence I met Ed. Sargent at Mr. Fanning's store in presence of Johnson Freeborn and my father. I asked him if he had told that I had abused her; he denied it, and wanted to go with me to Mrs. Clark to clear up the matter. I said "no, if you say you did not tell it I am satisfied." Through the day I understood Mrs. Clark went to Sargent and asked him why he had denied what he had said; he told her, as I understood, that he had forgotton, as I had taken him unawares, but that he would tell me of it when he met me. This I learned from my brother, Robert Clark. That evening I met him, Ed. Sargent, on the road; we had a few words, when his sister and his wife came up. I asked him why he denied the story; he said he denied having seen me slapping or throwing out the girl; but did not deny the rest. I said, "didn't you tell me before my father and Freeborn that you had told her nothing. He called me a d—d liar. I called him a liar; he repeated the words with additional force, adding that I was a b—h and a wh—e. I told him to keep those words to himself, and called his sister some bad names. He called me names, and I struck him with a stone, and told him not to call me a wh—e; and he said "you are a G—dd—d wh—e; I tried to strike him again with a stone, and he either with his open hand, or shut hand, I don't know which, but he knocked me into the ditch off the road. When I fell I could not get up, and moved around lest he should kick me. When I had got partially up on my hands, he caught me by the shoulders and sonsed me down again, and threw me against the side of the ditch. His wife then came up and caught me to help me up, and his sister took him by the arm, and said, "come away, and don't dirty your hands with her." Just as I got up, my husband came up, and enquired what all this was about. I told him part of what had taken place. My husband told him, Sargent, that he was no man for striking a woman. My husband told him he might law away; but that he, Sargent, would pay for it with a hide full of sore bones. Sargent was trying to tell my husband his way of the case, and I told him not to deny what he had said. I picked up a stone and told to strike me now when my husband was present. His wife caught me, and I think took the stone from me, and begged me not to bring any more quarrels for her sake. I said, "for your sake I will," and I told her I pitied her for getting into such a nest, and added that she might as well have got into h—l.

The defendant was fined $5 and costs, amounting in all to $9.60; to be paid in 10 days or in default to go to gaol for one month.

Batman, school house; W. Muncaster, addition to barn for S. Skippen; W. Sturgis, house and blacksmith shop.—Manitowaning Expositor.

ST. JOSEPH'S ISLAND.

HILTON, May the 31.—Our Island was favored with a much-needed shower last week. After a three days' rain crops are doing their very best. J. DeGeer, of Richard's Dock, has about eight acres of as fine looking fall wheat as may be seen in Ontario, at least so say steamboat travellers.

J. Hyland lost about fifteen acres of spring crop by fire last week. If the summer be a dry one and the fire find its way into some of those large cedar swamps where timber has been taken out there will be warm work for not a few of the settlars.

On the 24th the Hilton and Bruce Mines base ball club met on the diamond field of the latter and played a friendly game which resulted in favor of the Bruce club by 16 to 28. The Hilton boys are loud in their praise of the manner in which they were treated and think that even a defeat has charms when received at the hands of such men as they of the Bruce.

Affairs looked interesting the other evening when some of our town-folk went in pursuit of a bear. Of course the bear vanished in some inexplicable way and the tailor is the only person who profited by the expedition.

News of the London disaster was received here by the Quebec at 6 o'clock in the evening of the 25th, which fact shows that we are not at all times foreign to the latest news.

On Sunday last two of our citizens were driving out to Paisley, when they passed a log heap, and three dogs were energetically barking and scratching around it, a halt was made and one of the logs found to be hollow, a long pole was inserted and some kind of an animal had taken refuge therein, visions of grey and black fox or other equally valuable animals, with mental calculations of what the skin would fetch rapidly passed through the mind of these two worthies, in a short time the animal was forced out and killed by the neighborly dogs. Alas for the sudden crash of exalted hopes, it proved to be a ground hog.—Chesley Enterprise.

The market is full of preparations for the hair, some of them good, and many of them good for nothing. R. P. Hall & Co., of Nashua, N. H., manufacture and sell an article of real merit, which has been advertised in the Express for the past year, and we have taken no little pains to inquire how it has been liked by the public. One of our druggists informs us that he has more than double the amount of Renewer than of all other hair preparations combined, and when a person once uses it, he will use no other, and that it is not only bought by the young people as a dressing, but by older persons for removing dandruff, preserving and increasing the growth of the hair and restoring its natural color. Another druggist says that he sells three or four times as much of Hall's as of all others.—Hampshire Express, Amherst, Mass.

THE TURNING POINT.—Some fifty years ago, a revivial at Yale College a young man of promising talents became deeply serious. His father who was a man of infidel principles, hearing of it, sent for his son to come home. He did not care to have him become a Christain. The summons was obeyed; he went home. And the result was that he soon lost his serious impressions, and remains unconverted. In due time he graduated, studied law, and commenced practice in that profession. But his life was a failure. He became a sceptic, acquired a taste for intoxicating liquors, became a drunkard, and his father and friends had to support him and his family.

It might have been different. Had to remained in college under the influence of that revival, with many of his fellow-studients, he might have become a Christain, consecrated his talents to Christ, and have been useful in his service.—American Messenger.

JACK.—Jack is a boy who lives to please. It is hard for him to say "No," but he does say it when he cannot do right if he says "Yes."

One day Ned Jones came to him and said, "Come, Jack; let's learn to smoke."

"No," said Jack, "not I! I hate to see a man smoke, and its worse for a boy."

"Why," said Ned.

"Because a boy ought to have a clean mouth and a sweet breath," said Jack.

That's true, said Ned and so ought a man, but he will not if he learns to smoke while he is a boy. Yes, it is worse to see a boy smoke than a man for it shows what the man will come to be!—Band of Hope Review.

THE Farmer's Advocate, for June is recieved. We have had no time to look over it, but doubt not it is as full of information as usual, interesting and useful to the farmers. Price $1 per annum in advance. Subscriptions recieved at this office.

Mrs. John Gallagher, was one day last week gathering herbs in the bush on their farm, four miles from here in Glenelg T'p, when suddenly she came very close to a bear before seeing it. It followed her some distance homewards. She lost her apron in the excitement which is all the harm done.

ED. JOS. HARTLEY, of Simcoe County, visited town the other night with Miss Lenora Marie Breen, and while here they decided that it was not good for Edward to live alone. The English Church clergyman was accordingly secured, the church opened and lighted, and then followed a skirmish for the necessary witnesses to complete the ceremony. These were picked up on the street in the persons of Messrs. Wm. Legate, Joseph Hughes, and Ward House, the latter giving the bride away. The couple had their photo taken by Osborne in the morning and left on the noon train for Mount Forest, as happy as doves, apparently not caring a cent whether Edward "kept school" any longer or not. May their lives ever be thus.—Orangeville Tiser.

The circus visited Fergus on Saturday, when the "sharpers" were hard at work. The post office was robbed of $140 while the postmaster was at the door looking at the procession. Another mode of robbing was tried without success. Two well dressed men drove to the Bank, alighted and went in and told the banker that a man wanted to speak to him in the buggy, who made enquiries about purchasing a draft to send to the Old Country, and a third party slipped in at the door and got into the safe and was found their by Mr. Ross, but unluckily escaped. Still another plan was resorted to viz.: selling tickets outside the gate, and when any one bought one they wouldn't give them change back, but would disappear through the crowd. Not a few got cheated out of $4, $5, and $10 bills in this way.

THAT NEW TESTAMENT.—A decent old Scotchwoman called into our [illegible] recently, and after sinking [illegible] and wiping her honest, [illegible] which was bathed in a [illegible] perspiration, said: "Maister [illegible] I've been lookin' ower that [illegible] and it's fairly gane [illegible] about me. Fat think ye? There's [illegible] auldfarrant hellavar noo, [illegible] the auld de'il is a vagrant [illegible] There's a place they [illegible] biggit up in place o' [illegible] ancient reekie hole that dyvours [illegible] used to be sent till. Ken ye if [illegible] name has ony connection wis [illegible] or Haddocks? If it has, It's likely caller, and fat will they due for roastin the feesh ony way?" The old lady's theology was too deep for us, and we said we would take the opportunity of asking the Revision committee, and then let her know. She was evidently relieved, and said "[illegible] eye" with a most thankful air. —[illegible] Gazette.

PERSONAL.

Mr. R. [illegible] Borden, of this place, left here on Thursday morning for Hillsdale, where he will act as book-keeper for the firm of Laird & Parker.

COUNTY ITEMS.

The piling in the river between the steamboat and railroad docks is now finished. It is apparently a good substantial job, much improving the appearance of that part of the river, and when the earth filling behind the piling is finished, it will add considerably to the width of the street.

BEAR SHOT.—On Friday last, Mr. Robt. Kerr, of the 12th con. of Sullivan, shot a she bear. She had three [illegible] but they all scampered off and took refuge in trees, Mr. Kerr being unable to find them. Three years ago he had shot at a bear, which escaped, and on skinning this one he found the bullet imbedded in her, thus showing it to be the same bear that he had previously shot.

HOME AGAIN.—On Friday evening last our old townsman, F. M. Butchart, Esq., arrived home from the Northwest, where he has been sojourning for a couple of years past. The captain looks hale and hearty and since his return has been interviewed by large numbers of our citizens, anxious to hear his opinion of the Northwest. It is needless to say he is in extacies with the territory, which he believes to be the best country out of doors, and speaks in glowing terms of its prospects. He is also more convinced than ever of the good effect of the National Policy. But there is never a rose without a thorn, and the Captain's thorn in this case is that he cast in his lot at Rapid City, expecting the Pacific Railway to cross the Little Saskatchewan at the point, and make it a city in reality as well as in name. The Company, however, have decided to run the line about twenty miles south of Rapid City; and Capt. Butchart is loud in his denunciation of the Syndicate and everything connected with them. Another cause of complaint is that a portion of the territory has been taken into Manitoba. He says that while the Northwest Territory is fine rolling land, a large portion of the Province is under water every spring, and what they have taken in will be taxed to drain Manitoba, and to keep up government machinery which they do not require. Barring these two specific complaints, however, Capt. Butchart's account of the country is most favorable.—O. S. Times.

The most miserable man in the world is the dyspeptic, and dyspepsia is one of the most troublesome difficulties to remove, but BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS always conquer it. It [illegible] the secretions, regulates the bowels, acts upon the Liver, aids digestion, and tones up the entire system. Trial Bottles 10 Cents, Large Bottles $1.00.

GOOD WHEAT.—On Monday last Mr. Thomas Nichol, of Normanby, laid on our table a stock of Fall Wheat which measures 2 feet 6 inches long, the head of which was just shooting out. Mr. Nichol informs us that he has thirteen acres which is thick on the ground, and of which the stock was an average specimen. This is remarkable good for this time of the year.—Review.

EXCURSION PROPOSED.—It is proposed by the Orangemen of South Grey to run an Excursion to Guelph from Durham on the 23rd inst., if arrangements can be made with the Grand Trunk. It is expected that about fifteen hundred people will go on this excursion. We hope it will take place as it will be both profitable and pleasant for our farmer friends to visit the Agricultural Collage.—Review.

Mr. Robert Myles, Reeve of Euphrasia has a heifer a little over a year and a half old which gives milk,—about a half gallon a day. The milk is of the purest and the best quality. He cannot account for it. The heifer itself is rather inferior, and was always kept separate from the other cattle. Of course it never had a Calf.—Thornbury Standard.

By the immense circulation thus given, public attention is directed to the merits of the new patent, and sales or introduction often easily effected.

Any person who has made a new discovery or invention, can ascertain, free of charge, whether a patent can probably be obtained by writing to Munn & Co. We also send free our Hand Book about the Patent Laws, Patents, Caveats, Trade-Marks, their costs, and how procured, with hints how to procure advances on inventions. Burdock BLOOD BITTERS

The Reform Association

OF East Grey, will meet in Convention in the Town Hall Flesherton, on Tuesday, 14th June, 1881, at one o'clock p. m. Meantime a limited number of circulars will be issued; but as it would be manifestly impossible to reach all thereby, friends of Reform throughout the Riding are requested to attend without further notice.

By order of the President.

WM. BROWN, Sec'y.

Ayer's Hair Vigor,

FOR RESTORING GRAY HAIR TO ITS NATURAL VITALITY AND COLOR.

IT is a most agreeable dressing, which is at once harmless and effectual for preserving the hair. It restores, with the gloss and freshness of youth, faded or gray, light, and red hair, to a rich brown, or deep black, as may be desired. By its use thin hair is thickened, and baldness often though not always cured. It checks falling of the hair immediately, and causes a new growth in all cases where the glands are not decayed; while to brashy, weak, or otherwise diseased hair, it imparts vitality and strength, and renders it pliable.

The VIGOR cleanses the scalp, cures and prevents the formation of dandruff; and, by its cooling, stimulating, and soothing properties, it heals most if not all of the humors and diseases peculiar to the scalp, keeping it cool, clean, and soft, under which conditions diseases of the scalp and hair are impossible.

As a Dressing for Ladies' Hair

The VIGOR is incomparable. It is colorless, contains neither oil nor dye, and will not soil white cambric. It imparts an agreeable and lasting perfume, and as an article for the toilet it is economical and unsurpassed in its excellence.

EARS AS AN INDEX OF CHARACTER.

Large ears can hear things in general, and denote bread, comprehensive views and modes of thoughts, while small ears hear things in particular, showing a disposition to individualize, often accompanied by a love of the minute. Large ears are usually satisfied with learning the facts of a case with the general principles involved—too strict enumeration of details, especially all repetition of the more unimportant, is wearisome to them. People with such ears like generally, and are as a general thing well fitted, to conduct large enterprises, to receive and pay out large sums; in buying or selling would prefer to leave a margin rather than reduce the quantity of any sort to the exact dimensions of the measure specified, and in giving would prefer to give with a free hand and without a too strict calculation as to the exact amount. Small ears, on the contrary, desire to know the particulars of a story as well as the main facts; take delight often in examing, handling or constructing tiny specimens of workmanship, are disposed to be exact with respect to inches and ounces in buying or selling to the extent, at least, of knowing the exact number over or under the stated measure given or received. People with such ears would, in most cases, prefer a retail to a wholesale business.

SELLING WOMEN IN BRITISH COLONIES.

In the house of Commons the other day Mr. Summers asked the Under Secretary for the Colonies whether the British Government in Natal recognized the sale of the women, and sanctioned the right of a native insolvent to include the marringeable value of his daughters in the assets of his estate. Mr. G Duff said that the Zulus of Natal, who out number the white by something like twenty to one, were still to a great extent governed by their own laws and customs. One of there customs was that a bridegroom, when he asked for a girl in marriage, gave to her father a certain number of cattle for his consent. That agreement would be recognized by our authority, provided there were evidence that the young lady herself consented. (Laughter.) He had no information on the second question.

A CANNON TO SHOOT TEN MILES.

The making of the patterns for the Lyman-Haskell acceleration or multi-charge gun at the Scott foundry of the Reading Iron Works was begun recently. The gun will be twenty-five feet long and have a bore six inches in diameter. Along the bore four pockets will be located, in each of these which a charge of powder will be placed, with the view of accelerating the speed of the ball after it leaves the chamber of the gun and during its progress through the bore. Experts who have seen the drawings and given the subject of the manufacture of heavy ordance a study have expressed the oponion that the gun will throw a ball a distance of ten or twelve miles, whereas five miles is a good range for the best cannon. The charge of powder will be 130 pounds, and the weight of shot 150 pounds. It is calculated that a shot from the gun will penetrate through two feet of solidwrought iron.—Reading Eagle.

When doctors disagree who shall decide. The people often decide by "throwing physic to the dogs,' and trying BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS, and the result is always satisfactory. Burdock Blood Bitters is the Multum in Parvo of medical science, curing all diseases of the Blood, Liver and Kidneys. A trial bottle only costs 10 cents. A dollar bottle may save you many dollars in doctor's bills.

Seeding may now be consipered at an end on this Island. To say that farmers are satisfied with the prosect would not be doing them justice; they are more than satisfied. The spring has been one of the most favorable ever known; crops were put in early and in good condition and since then the weather has been everything that could be desired. Besides it is estimated that nearly one-third more breadth has been sown this year than last. Should the result of the harvest be what present appearance warrant we shall have such a bounteous season as will more than make up for last season's failure.—Manitoulin Expositor.

We are pleased to announce the arrival of Messrs. McLaughlen & McCoy manufactures of pumps in our midst. There is considerably territory especially to the east of us to work on. We cordially wish to the new firm a successful business.—Chesley Enterprise.

The liver is the grand purifying organ of the system; when inactive or obstructed bad blood and ill health are certain results. Burdock blood Bitters cure all diseases arising from disordered Liver, Stomach, Bowels or Kidneys, purifying, restoring and strengthening. It regulates the Bowels, cleanses and enriches the Blood, and imparts tone to every organ of the body. Trial Bottles 10 Cents.

TWO CHILDREN HANG AND BURY A BROTHER.

A despatch from Statesville, N. C., says, Absolom, Brown a widower living near here, went away from home yesterday, leaving his three children alone. The youngest of these children a boy, age 5 years, had long been sickly, and the two older children, a boy and girl, concieved the idea of putting him out of the way. They accordingly tied a rope around his neck and swung him to the joist of the house, where he was found a few minutes later by a colored woman of the neighborhood, who passed through the lot on an errand. This woman cut the child down and laid it on the bed, when it began to gasp and finally regained consciousness. She then went her way, and, returning homeward sometime later, stopped again at Brown's house, where she ascertained that the brother and sister had taken the young child off the bed, carried it out behind the garden and buried it. She hastened to the scene of the burial, dug the child up and carried it to the house. The child died to-day from the shock.

LINES.

Composed on the death of Chas. W. E. Rutledge, son of J. B. and S. A. Rutledge.

Our home was cheer, our hearts with joy
[illegible] pleasure,
Till Death has borne away our boy,
A fond and precious treasure.

Oh cruel death! Oh cruel grave!
That snatched from us our pride,
And left us here to mourn and grieve,
While he has crossed the tide.

Tho' but a span from earth to heaven,
The gulf seems wide and deep,
Since from our arms and fond embrace,
Thou'rt gone, we're left to weep.

The days and hours glide swiftly by,
And soon our lot shall be
To leave our home beneath the sky,
And soar away to thee.

Oh may the God whose just decree
Has called our darling home,
[illegible]
Prepared to meet our doom.

And when we've paid the debt we owe,
In death with rapturous joy,
Our souls in transport home will go,
To meet our darling boy.

J. S. R.

THE VICTORIA DISASTER.

The morning of that fatal day,
Rolled o'er the town its level ray,
And showed in garb of light attire,
Son, daughter, brother, sister, sire.

All downward to the river's banks
They wend their way with jokes and pranks;
Determined that this day shall be Remembered long for gayety.

A steamer there their freight will bear.
Whose name is linked with England's fame
Victoria, a name so dear
To both Canadian heart and ear.

What is the cause of all this mirth?
To pay a tribute to thy birth?
'Tis so, indeed, and blithely gay
They'll spend that twenty-fourth of May.

The last on board. They quickly sail
Along to Springbank's sunny dale,
And there there light hours of that day
They while away in sports and play.

Some walk, some talk, but all agree
To drink of pleasure full and free,
At last they all have filled the day,
And homeward wend their watery way.

Some are contented now to sit,
But others to and fro do flit,
To view each passing sight and scene
That opens to their vision keen.

When all at once upon their sight
A ship glides silent through the night,
All rush unto one side to see
This ship and who upon her be.

But ill the vessel could withstand
The equal weight at her command,
And when unto one side it came
She lurched with the unequal strain.

A crash is heard, then fear did thrill
A silence still and deep, until
O'er vale and hill one awful scream
Did rend the air as through a dream.

And then that living mass is poured
Oh dreadful doom to be be deplored,
Into the deep and cold dark waves,
Some ne'er to rise, but for their graves.

Oh Londoners we blend our tears
With yours for those who on that morn
Left you with joy and not with fears,
So sudden from your bosom torn.

Oh God, we know except from thee
Such dire mishap there could not be,
But we would ask that for their woe
Thy sympathising love should flow.

O soothe those hearts by anguish riven,
With such a powerful stroke from heaven
And grant that this a warning bear
To all our hearts for death prepare.

HENRY D. LEITCH, Priceville.

IN THE MIDST OF PERIL.

By the Author of "Hidden Quicksands," "A Relentless Foe," "Maggie O'Connor's Fortunes," &c., &c.

Not so Glorvina. She had known Tim O'Brien from boyhood; she understood how vain and weak he was, and how the hope of winning her by a sham rescue had lured him on. And then there was his old father. It would break his heart to have his son brought to a disgraceful death. She did not attempt to undress. She stole out towards the room were Tim was a solitary prisoner and watched. Only one sentinel at the door, and he was walking carelessly up and down. She advanced to him.

"Will you oblige a lady?" she asked, with her sweetest smile.

"If it's in my power, ma'am," he replied respectfully.

"I wish to say a few words to Mr. O'Brien—the prisoner," she said. 'Will you let me in?" And she offered him a five-pound note.

The man's eyes sparkled at the sight of it.

"I don't see that it can do any harm," he answered; but, if I do, ma'am, you'll never tell I did?"

"I solemnly promise you I never will."

"Then pass," he said unlocking the door and admitting her.

Tim was sitting at a table, his head bowed on his arms. His bonds had been removed, and food stood by the side of him. He looked up as she entered.

"Glorvina?" he exclaimed.

"Yes, Tim; I have come to see if I cannot save you."

"You forgive me then? You do not utterly scorn and loathe me?"

"I pity you—I pity still more your good old father!"

"Oh, Glorvina, I did it all for love of you—because I wanted to appear to save you, to seem the bravest of the brave, since courage was the charm to win you; and I knew, I felt I was a coward!"

He bowed his head in utter shame as he spoke.

"It was a terrible delusion," she said, with repressed contempt; "but now we have no time to talk. These windows are so closely barred that no sentries are thought to be needed outside them. I bring you a file"—she gave it to him—"and you can cut through the bars, I think, unheard, as the door is thick. Once out you know how to escape from the grounds by one of the by-paths. But stay, you will need money. Here are fifty pounds—all I have just now—and let me hear in some way when you are safe."

He had fallen at her feet, and seizing her hand, he covered it with kisses and tears. She drew it away with a feeling of loathing.

"Make haste!" she said. "You have no time to lose."

Then she advanced to the door and called "Sentry," rapping on it at the same time. The sentinel, on the watch for her summons, opened the door, and she passed out swiftly. The man glanced in, saw that his prisoner was safe, and locked the door.

* * * * * * *

The next day it was found that O'Brien had escaped, and that two bars of the window had been cut through. In his heart Coghlan was glad that his old friend's son had not to endure the awful fate awaiting the rebels; and no great efforts were made to trace him. That morning Leicester had a long conversation with his host, in which he represented to him how dangerous longer residence at the Priory would be, and he besought him to take the ladies to Dublin, and to give him Eva in marriage.

"When," added the young soldier, "I will sell out, and you can all come and stay with me and my wife in my place in England."

To both requests the father assented; indeed the ladies had vowed they would not remain at St. Kevin's. It was settled that the Hussars should stay to guard them during the needful preparations for departure, a duty which proved equally agreeable to Eva and her lover; and, thus for a time united, it was almost with regret they saw the day come when they were to leave their old home, though now full of such terrible memories.

Mr. Coghlan had gone, the day after their rescue, to see and thank the heroic clergyman to whom they owed their lives. He found him still weak and his arm painful; loss of blood had been the chief injury, and the flesh wound promised to heal well; but what a wound it was—the whole length of the arm! It was wonderful, the doctor said, that he had not bled to death.

The Hussars kept him with them till he was well, and nursed him with tender brotherly care. They thought him such a hero that they regretted he was not one of themselves. Captain Leicester was excessively kind to him; and it was with him he journeyed to Dublin when he was well enough to resume his educational duties. It was even then a very pale and weak young man who entered the handsome Dublin drawing-room behind his friend—now soon to become a bridegroom—and who received, with his old diffidence and bashfulness, the thanks and congratulations of the family.

Teddy now looked up to Mr. Surridge as the greatest of heroes; and the boy's innocent admiration and hero-worship were almost touching; even Norah abated her efforts at teasing, and felt as much reverence for the tutor as she was capable of.

He had been back only three days, when, as he was sitting writing in the new school-room, he heard a knock for admittance. At his "Come in," Glorvina entered, looking very lovely from the brilliant carnation that burned upon her cheeks.

She held two or three quill pens in he hand, and with a little nervous laugh she said—

"I have come to ask if you will be so good as to mend these pens for me Mr. Surridge. I am so stupid at doing it."

He took them from her hand, and, with a ready "Of course, with pleasure," proceeded in a matter-of-fact way to comply with her request. She seated herself at the table and played with her rings. By-and-by she said timidly—

"Do you know, Mr. Surridge, that I think you are the bravest man I ever knew, or ever shall know?"

"Oh, Miss Desmond!" he exclaimed deprecatingly, and coloring deeply.

"And," she continued, "don't you remember that the banshee promised me that my husband should be the bravest man I ever knew?"

He sprang to his feet, his face aflame.

"Miss Desmond," he exclaimed, "what can you, what do you mean?"

"What I say"—with an arch smile, and holding out her hand. "Oh, don't be so stupid!"—stamping her foot. "How can I marry the bravest man, if he won't ask me?"

Another moment, and he was kneeling beside her, looking up with happy incredulous eyes into her blushing smiling face.

"Oh, Glorvina, it is impossible!" he cried. "I—I adore you; but you—you cannot possibly love such an ugly fellow as I am. It is just pity, or generosity, or gratitude"—piteously—"that makes you speak thus."

"It is neither pity nor gratitude," she said, very shyly now.

"Then it is love! Oh, Glorvina, my sweet, my darling, say that you love me!"

And she murmured it in his arms.

When at length they parted the girl said with a merry laugh—

"It was as near being a proposal on my part as well as could be, James. But I saw it was hopeless to leave matters to you, and I thought I would play Desdemona."

"Dear how could I speak?" he said tenderly. "You so rich, so beautiful! I could not have dared."

"Yet you dared death for me," she said with emotion. "Ah, James, the banshee prophecy is fulfilled! I shall marry the bravest man I know."

A double wedding took place soon afterwards, of James and Glorvina, Eva and Captain Leicester; and, on their return from the honeymoon, which was spent on the Continent, the Coghlans joined them in England.

But by-and-by, when "the troubles" were over, the family returned to Ireland. By that time popular feeling in the neighborhood had undergone a revulsion in their favor. Mr. Coghlan had provided for the widow and children of O'Rourke, and the poor woman had told her friends how hard the Squire had tried to get a pardon for her Dan.

The quick-witted people began to see why he had acted as he did, and to understand that he did not love [illegible] less because he had done his duty. Moreover, the agitators were no longer active.

Glorvina and her husband often visited St. Kevin's Priory. James had, soon after their marriage, sent a handsome present to Kathleen, which enabled her lover at once to "speak to the priest," and, on their marriage, to set up in a little holding of their own. Here one day Kathleen owned to them —when questioned by James—that the appearance of the banshee had been planned by Captain Rock, and that the figure had been represented by an agent of his; also that she herself had been employed to wail beneath Glorvina's window. For the people knew that the [illegible] sympathies were with them, and were anxious to save her and the tutor from the danger threatening the family.

Glorvina in just used to declare to her husband that she had been shamefully inveigled into marrying him by this pretended prophecy; but he read the truth in her eyes even before she added—

"Yet I shall always bless the Whiteboys for showing me that the man I already loved was worthy of a princess."

She had, long before, received a letter, given to her by an unknown messenger, which informed her that Tim O'Brien had reached America in safety. He told Glorvina in it that he meant to begin a new life, and "for her sake." try to keep at least an honest man.

Often, when children blessed their union, and their love, tried by years, grew only more tender, Glorvina would bless the happy peril to which she owed her husband.

[THE END.]

PEALS OF TRUTH.

NOBODY can be so properly the closest friend of a son and daughter as the father who has worked both from infancy and the mother who has lived for them through the years of their life from the nursery upward. Our home acquaintances should be our best beloved.

IT is very surprising that praise should excite vanity; for, if what is said about us be true, it is no more than we know before, and it cannot raise in our own esteem; if it be false, it is surely a most humiliating refletion that we are admired only because we are not known, and that a closer inspection would bring forth censure instead of commendation.

The following dress was worn at a recent bridal reception in San Francisco: A royal purplesin, lined with crimson; dead gold plaques adorned the sides; a drapery of eau de Nile silk, graceful depending from the right shoulder, was caught up to the base of the train; artistic jardiniers bordered the skirt, form which arose vines at smilax, enriching neck and arms branching off at the back of the head into a short of bower, which enclosed an artistic ruffle arrangement of pea cocks' feathers; tiny harebells wreathed the brow, and garlands of sun flowers and tiger lilies fell in graceful festoons from the shoulders. On each plaque a motto appropriate to the occasion was painted.

TRUST.—When we examine human relations closely, we find that all the happiness they promise, all the opportunities they offer, all the advancements they promote, are entirely dependence upon the trust that is included in and inspires them. Except for our trust in one another, we could never feel the least security of life or limb, of property or reputation. All that a man values, save his owner honor, is at the mercy of those around him. They can take his life at any moment and in hundred different ways. They can steal or lay waste his property, burn his dwelling, destroy his family, ruin his good name. How is it that he can enjoy a moments peace, knowing the posibilities that surround him? Simply because he trusts. He knows that the general goodwill and right feeling of the community are sufficently developed to prevent more than a remote possibility of such injuries. He even believes that the desire to befriend and help one another is strong enough to assure him of a certain amount of sympathy in time of need.

A QUESTION FOR CHRISTIANS.

Social and religious circles in Buffalo are to a certain extent, much exercised just now over a case which promised to be of unusal interest. A young Sunday School teacher, a lady of irreproachable charaher, a member of the church, and an earnest young Christain, who dispenses spiritual comfort to her scholars Sunday after Sunday, has, it appears, been in the habit of assisting her father—who is a saloon keeper—to dispence spirtuous comfort to his customers on the intervening week-days. The young lady's confrers in the church desire her resignation for the above season. They say she is not consistent in thus mixing her liquors—we mean her father's mundane employment—with her Sunday School work, and want her to give up one or the other; but she will do neither. She says that she fails to see any more harm in selling the liquor over her father's bar than her opponents do in buying and drinking it; and we don't know but that the young lady is right—so far. Those who are throwing stones at her should see that they are not living in glass houses—as it would seem some of them at least, are. If—as appears to be the case—they are given to buying and drinking strong drink, they surely cannot find much fault with their young sister for selling it. There may be a doubt as to her father's wisdom in desiring or premitting her presence in his bar; and her line of argument may be placing the responsibilitie and duties of the Christain on a very low basis; but all the same it does seem unreasonable that those who drink the liquor should object to those who sell it. The objection is not the fact, that she is saloon keeper's daughter. As we understand the case, that fact does not come into consideration at all. The objection is to her selling the liquor, and the question at issue is simply this. Can a Sunday School teacher, an avowded Christain, consistently sell that which is on all hands acknoleged to be the cause of much misery here and hereafter? the question of total abstinence or temperance does not come into consideration at all; and therefore, by raising the objection they did on the grounds upon which it is founded, the young lady's opponents have placed themselves in the wrong; for, if it be inconsistent with her profession of Christianity to sell the liquor, it must be inconsistent with their profession for Christianity to drink it.

FALSE ECONOMY.

Many people think it economy to buy cheap food, and save the articles which really are more necessary than they believe. There are people who really grudge ten cents for vegatables because they say it is to dear; others will restrict their childern in milk: others will buy no fish, because there is nothing in it; others will deny the little ones a refreshing orange or banana, and others will never have a pudding on the table.

Meat and bread, hot ca kes; chops and steaks they call cheap, because it is real food. These people forget that variety really nourishes the body and makes up for the food which can alone supply our requirements. Besides that there is no real economy in it. Meat and bread cost more than vegetables and puddings combined with them. The former leave you straving for something else, which you have to satisfy, with a good mixed diet supply all your wants.

HOW THE SNAKE GETS A NEW SUIT.

"Some people think that snakes only shed their skins at certain season of the year," said the keeper. "That's a mistake. If they are fed and kept right warm they change their coats about every eight weeks through the year." "Does it pain them?" "Not a bit of it. You see the skin is forming underneath and the other gradually gets dry, When it is ready to shed it loosens round the lips, and the repitl rubs itself against the earth or rock in the cage, and turns the upper part over the eye and the lower part over the throat. Then it commences to glide around the glass case all the time rubbing itself against something until the entire skin is worked off. Sometimes this takes three days; occasionaly in a few hours. I don't believe they have a bit of entelligence. For all I feed them, they would as lief bite me as any stranger. I can dandle a great many of them with safety, but it's only the knack of the thing—not that they won't bite, but they can't get the chance.

THE LIME KILN CLUB.

"When a man axes me who libes nes' doah," began the old man as the triangle sounded to order. "I answer him Brown or Jones or White, or whatever de name may be, but when he goes beyond dat an' axes what salary de man airns, how often his wife changes bonnets an' how dey make seben dollars a week go further dan I kin fo'teen, I become a clam. I has no business to know, an' when I do know I won't tell. I used to have some curosity in dis direcsdun, but I has got ober it of late y'ars. When I know dat a certain man, receivin' a salary of $12 per week, kin give parties, hire carriages an' dress his wife in silk, it makes me glum. Dat is, it used to. I used to wonder why I couldn't do de the same thing on de same money, but I nebber could. When de ole woman used to tell me dat starin womun had new silks, new hats, new close an' new shoes once a month de y'ar roun,' an' we havin' to lib-clus on de same money, it made me mad. Dat is, it used to. When I saw men who owed for their washin' struttin' aroun' like lords, while I had to work seben days in a week an' pay my debts, I felt like smashin' frew the sidewalk. But I has got obar all dis. When I meet a woman who kin dress like a banker's wife on de $10 or $12 per week paid her husband, I doam' 'low myself to eben fink about it. When I see a man buying a twenty cent cigar, sportin' a cain takin' champagne, while his children at home bar'foot, I try to believe it am all right. When a lady wid $300 worf of close on axes me to do a job of whitewashin' in a parlor whar' de bes pictur's come from a tea store an' de bes' cha'r am under chattel mortgage, I doan' stop to see who she am foolin'. Nayburs ob mine who owe all the butchers widin a circle of a mile, kin pay fo'dollahs fur a libery rig on Sunday an' I shan't criticise. Wives may go shoppin' every night an' gin parties ebery night an' my ole woman will keep the cabin jist de same. Since we quit wonderin' and speculation' ober dese fings we feel much better. We know fur a fact jist how fur we kin make money go. If odder folks kin lib like lords on a salary of $600 a y'ar it's a streak of good luck an' none of our business. My advice to you to am let such fings pass. Dey am mysteries wid which we have no bizness, an' de mo' you ponder ober dem de less you will enjoy what you have honestly airned by hard work an' saved by good economy."

HAIR.

Not less than ninety per cent. of the women and five per cent. of the men in this country wear more or less false hair. This enormous consump-tion of the ar[illegible] ... the face, charming coquetly to a hue, having a [illegible], a bandeau or a preserved [illegible], bangs or waves arranged at the [illegible]. Some people think that [illegible] never grow gray headed. The fact is, one third of white threads may be mingled with such hair, and few will notice it. The same proportion of blonde-haired people turn gray as those with any other colored hair.

The proportion of people who dye their hair is also surprising. Some twenty per cent. are said to do this. Of course, the greater proportion of his dyers are white haired people. A white head is often, though not always, a sign of a life of trouble.

The dresser is more than often amused by requests from the country for "cold water frizzes." These, of course, comprise an article which will curl easily by application of watter and are easily supplied. Curly hair has been the fashion for a year or more.

Of the two human hair is the most called for. Hair-raising is a sort of industry in Europe. The peasant girls, who are much in the open air, get their heds cropped once a year, and thus furnish a portion of the supply. They are satisfied with a stipend so small that an American woman would scorn to touch six times its value. Of the material imported France supplies half the trade and England and Germany divide the rest. The raw material finds its way here in great quantities, and is made up on this side of the watter. The business is young yet in this country.

KEEPING HIS PLACE

"You know Jones," said Rogers; "confound him, I don't believe he cares for nothin'. Once he went yachting with us, and while we was all admirin' the sea and the scenery, there he sot and sot on the edge of the boat with his legs danglin' over readin a book, and diden't seem to care for nothin', and the girls went up to him and talked to him, and all they could get out was a 'yes' or a 'no' till they give it up as a bad job. All of a sudden there came a squall, and the boat she gave a lurch, and before we knowed what had happened he'd been pitched overboard into the water, and when we fished him out, would you believed it, he had his thumb on the place where he'd stopped reading when he wentdown."

SUMMER FOOD.

The great danger in warm weather is in cooking too much and in eating too great a quantity of heavy farinaceous food. Of late years a public opinion has been created against meat in warm weather, and many persons abstain from it who did not at all understand that they may be doing themselves more injury by the warm bread and biscuit, the rich pies and puddings, the heated butter in vegetables, the fried potatoes, the tough omelets, and the thousand and one ways in which people who are accustomed to meat endeavor to make up for its absence.

Meat in excess is not good at any time, and less is required in warm weather than in cold: but to the worker, and to those who lead active lives, meat once in the day is not too much in the warmest weather, and it ought to be of a good, nourishing, digestible sort, such as tender roast beef, broiled stake or chops, roast or stewed veal, roast lamb or chicken. Fish can be made use of in summer, especially the solid kinds, such as blue fish, twice in the week with very great advantage; but it ought not to take the place of meat, nor be used in addition to it, at least, not upon ordinary occasions. A dish of nicely cooked meat or fish, two vegetables, a salad, an entree, a simple pudding, or dish of fruit, and some light graham rolls, or whole wheat bread, is good enough dinner for any one whose taste has not been very greatly indulged and perverted

Salads should be simply dressed during the summer so as to get all the benefit possible from the fresh lettuce, the watter-cress, and green garden growth of which it is composed.

Fried dishes should be discontinued, and potatoes should give place to peas, greens, rice, spinach, cauliflower, and the various delightful products of the summer in the vegetable line, which culminate in the everwelcom corn and tomatoes. Potatoes contain more starch than any other kind of food in common use, and have consequently less nutritive quality; they therefore return less for the time and trouble required to digest them than the same amount (in bulk) of other foods. Moreover, they take long to ripen, and before they are ripe, are not fit for food at all. The early, what are called "young" potatoes, therefore, are about the poorest ingredient that can be introduced into the regular bill of fare, and as "old" potatoes are often "grown" or begun to decompose, which they show by black spots, it is really of importance that they be discontinued for a while, even those who are very much wedded to them, returning with double zest to their favorite dish after a brief respite, and when it has acquired mealy perfection.

Eggs are very useful in summer. Nothing can surpas for lightfulness and healthfulness the summer morning breakfast of fresh soft boiled eggs, crisp, cool water-cresses, well-made cocoa, graham or oatmeal rolls, or toast. Of course to this may be added a dessert of fruit, the fresh strawberries or strawberry cake, the stewed rhubarb for those who like it, the decorative red and white currants well mixed with powdered sugar, marmalade, not to be compared, however, to the sanitary quality of fruit fresh and free from its weight of cooked sugar.

Do not drug the system with nauseous purgatives that only debilitate. Burdock Blood Bitters is natures own Cachartic, it acts at once upon the Bowels, the Skin, the Liver and the Kidneys, arousing all the secretions to a healthy action. It purifies the Blood and cures all Humors, even the worst form of Scrofula, and tones up the Nervous and Debilitated.

The most miserable man in the world is the dyspeptic, and dyspepsia is one of the most troublesome difficulties to remove, but BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS always conquer it. It stimulates the secretions, regulates the bowels, acts upon the Liver, aids digestion, and tones up the entire system. Trial Bottles 10 Cents, Large Bottles $1.00.

IRELAND.

Affairs in Ireland are fast approaching a crisis, and we expect every day to hear that the mobs who have gathered to prevent the officers of the law from carrying out their instructions, have at last been fired upon. The Government appear to think the forbearance they have shown up to the present has been misplaced, and now state, through Mr. Forster, Home Secretary, for Ireland, that they hope that the large force now in Ireland, and which would be strengthened if necessity demanded, would prove to the Irish people that the law was not to be upset with impunity, and that however painful its execution in individual cases might be, it must be carried out at all cost and at all hazards.

THE LONDON DISASTER.

MR. GEORGE PARISH, manager of the Thames Navigation Company, and Captain Rankin, of the ill-fated steamer Victoria, have been arrested for manslaughter, at the instance of a man named Jones, postmaster at London West. As far as we can judge from the evidence that has been taken during the investigation, which has been an exhaustive one, the boat was totally unfit and unsafe for the work she was engaged in. The boiler was fastened in the most superficial manner, and there were many other defects. We consider the Inspector of Steamers was as culpable as the parties who have been arrested, for granting a certificate to such a ramshackle concern. The evidence shows that he was either extremely careless or downright ignorant, and should be promptly dismissed and his place filled by some one who has a slight regard for the lives of his fellow creatures.

THE jury in the investigation as to the cause of the London disaster, after many hours' deliberation brought in a verdict of censure only against the Manager, Captain, and Engineer of the Victoria. The captain is blamed for accepting the position of captain and wheelsman, thereby being unable to pay proper attention to the management of his boat. The engineer was blamed for not keeping the hold free of water and for not informing the captain of the dangerous condition of the boat. The Manager was blamed for not having sufficient hands on board, and the Inspector comes in for a rap over the knuckles for granting a certificate to such a gingerbread concern as the Victoria proved to be.

After weeks spent in examining witnesses, and putting the country to an enormous expense this is the result—a mere vote of censure. This is all the satisfaction to be received by those whose homes have been made desolate and their hearts bowed down with sorrow.

This is all the punishment to be received by the men who, for the sake of a few dollars, hurled hundreds of people to an untimely grave without a moment's warning. Out upon such a farce say we.

THE STORM.

The storm which passed over here on Monday seems to have been universal, and a great deal of damage has been done in all parts of the Country. It appears from the reports recieved that the people of the United States suffered severly. In Dismonies, Iowa, hail stones fell as large as goose eggs, smashing glass and killing poultry. The wind blew down houses killing one man and blowing his wife and child a quarter of a mile. In Taxes houses were carried away bodly and many people took refuge in their cellars. In Minesota we learn that great damage was done to Railroads, telegraph lines, houses and the crops, and several people killed. In Kansas buildings were destroyed, and many were severely hurt. From several places in Canada we hear of barns and churches being struck with lightning, fences blown down, and houses beingu nroofed, but at the time of writing have heard of noloss of life. In Exeter, near London, it is said hail stones were as large as hen eggs, and did a great deal of damage.

Since writing the above fuller accounts of the effects of the great storm have been recieved, and is proves to be one of the most disastrous that has occured for many years. At Kingston, several persons were injured by lightning. At Sharon, houses were unroofed trees blown down and telegraph wires broken. From Peterbrow, Bellevelle and several other places we hear the same story. At Mount Forest the hail fail was very severe, where it was said towards the end of it the stones were more like chunks of Ice, one piece was picked up by Mr. Thomas, Stovel measuring 12 by 18 inches.

In the United States the accounts are appalling. Houses were lifted from their foundations and dashed to pieces. Horses and cattle were taken up by the wind and carried quite a distance, and hurled to the ground in a lifeless state. At St. Joseph, in the state of Missouri, it is stated that fifty people have lost their lives, and from various places comes the report of people being killed. The distruction of calves, sheep, and poultry has been very great from the hail, and the growing crops, where they were sufficiently advanced have been completely destroyed. The amount of window glass and green houses that have been destroyed is beyond computation. At Topeka a horse was taken out of his stable by the wind, carried over a hill & dashed to the ground a mile distant. A woman's trunk was lifted out of her bed-room along with her watch. The latter was discovered a quarter of a mile from the house dashed to pieces, but the trunk has not been seen since.

Taking it altogether it has been something beyond anything that has visited us even in the memory of the "oldest inhabitant," and we hope never to be called on to be record such another.

THE farewell supper given to Mr. Geo. J. Blyth on Friday evening last, was a very enjoyable affair. Shortly after 9 o'clock, about 30 guests sat down to a sumptuous repast served up by mine host Mr. T. Sproule, of the Revere. Among those present we noticed Dr. McGregor, Chatsworth, Jno. Frost, Esq., Owen Sound, and Mr. Fawcett, of the Advance, Flesherton. After due justice had been done to the viands, the cloth was removed, and toasts and speeches were in order. Dr. McGregor, in the absence of Dr. Sproule, who had been called away, but put in an appearance later in the evening, filled the chair, and Mr. A. McIntyre the Vice-Chair, but being called away early in the evening, his place was ably filled by Mr. A. Turner. The first toast, of course, was the Queen and the Royal family, which was drank with all honors. The toast of the Governor and the Parliament of Canada was responded to by Dr. Sproule, and John Frost, Esq. The Army and Navy was given by the Vice-Chair, Song, Red, White and Blue, Mr. T. G. Morgan. The next in order was "Our Guest," which was given by the Chair in a very neat speech. Messrs. J. Frost, A. Turner, A. Butter, Thos. Sproule, and A. McIntyre spoke in eulogistic terms of Mr. Blyth, to which he responded in feeling and appropriate terms. The learned professions were responded to by Drs. McGregor and Sproule, and John Frost, Esq. Our mechanical and Agricultural interests brought Messrs. Sullivan, Shanahan, and Butter to their feet. "The Press" was responded to by Messrs. Fawcett, of the Advance, Morgan, of the STANDARD, and Blyth, of the late Expositor. "The ladies, God bless them," received due justice from the hands of Mr. Turner, and Mr. Thos. Sproule responded to the toast of the "Host and Hostess." This brought the proceedings to a close.

We regret our space prevents us from giving some of the speeches in full, as they were really good, and were listened to by those present with the greatest attention.

MEAFORD ROAD.

From a Correspondent.

THERE is a dearth of news here at present, neither births, deaths nor marriages, and no rowdyism or church excitement, really nothing of a political or peculiar nature to write about except the frost that visited us last Sunday night, and that is, it is to be supposed, pretty well known. The early garden vegetables in the shape of beans, tomatoes, &c., have received their death warrant. The grain crops have suffered to a large extent, with the exception of fall wheat, which is almost a failure here. The other crops before the frost were looking well and there was a good prospect of a bountiful harvest. But a good warm rain and warm weather would soon make things look bright again. There has been no three yolked eggs laid here yet, the chickens of that breed not having come to maturity yet.

FEVERSHAM

From our Correspondent.

There was quite an excitement created in this quiet neighborhood last week, over a barn raising, which took place on the farm of Mr. Jas. Reid, 8th con., Osprey. It appears there was a report circulated previous to the day of the raising that there would be a contest between the north and south portions of the neighborhood. The north included the 10th and 12th lines the south the 6th and 8th lines. Although there was little or no attention paid to the report by the southerners, the northerners were busily engaged selecting their best men for the occasion, so on the day of the raising they gathered together and came en-masse to the raising quite jubilant over their expected success? "But alas, for their boasting they were badly beaten. Not satisfied with this, they commenced using some rather strong and abusive language, which finally led to blow's, when one young man from the 12th line, and the principal agitator, came to the conclusion he would be more comfortable elswhere, and for this purpose made a bee line across the orchard for the opposite side of the field. It would have been much better had he selected a more suitable route and not run through the top of an apple tree, (dwarf) almost if not totally destroying it. But we trust Mr. Reid will fully consider the circumstances, and this young man's abhorence of fighting, and deal lightly with him. Although the row did not amount to much, those young men went home crestfallen, (having been twice beaten) we hope wiser men than when they came. We trust that they will refrain in the future from undertaking what they are not able to accomplish.—OPEN EYE.

EUPHRASIA.

From a Correspondent.

The excitement at present in this vicinity is the late frost, which was very severe, more especially where the land is low and damp In the neighborhood of Epping, nothing is injured, not even the most tender vegetables, while one or two miles south every thing in that line was utterly destroyed, even the fruit in the famous Queens valley is baked as in an oven, in fact all through the valley to Thornbury, it is the same cry, while we are sorry to say the crops are badly injured, and in some cases have to be ploughed down and resown. We have the same account from Meaford gardens, utterly ruined, also grain damaged. Hadn't Vennor something to do with it.

DUNDALK

COLAPSE OF A BUILDING.—The building erected a few days since in Dundalk for a tannery was brought low by the wind storm on the evening of the 13th inst. It was built of scantling frame 28x58 feet two story. Mr. Ketchum (the owner) was up on the building half an hour before, and was fully satisfied with the workmanship of the contractor, Mr. Cross. The villagers turned out in the evening after the storm was over, and dismembered the wreck, piling the timbers and scantling up neatly and promised the contractor further aid in the re-erecting of the same.

On Tuesday last we were through the township of Proton from Dundalk to Hopeville & Cedarville. The land in that section of country is much bettor than we expected to find it, being the first time we have been in that part of said Township. We took particular notice to things generally along the way; crops are looking well, the bad effects of the late frost, which are so general, are not to be seen in Proton; even the vines and the gardon vegetables at Hopeville were not injured. The above Township is well adapted to stock raising and dairy purposes, and we believe if there were a few good cheese and butter factories established, say five miles apart, the people would fast acumulate wealth.

THE WHEAT CROP.

The Chicago Tribune has been investigating the condition of the wheat crop, and it finds that the United States wil have little wheat to spare this year. As the grain trade has been of enormous advantage to that country for several years, the fact that they will not have as much as usual will have great significance in forecasting the business outlook for the future. The Tribune says:

First—The winter wheat crop of the whole United States will not aggregate more than two thirds the yield of last year.

Second—The acreage now sown to spring wheat is twenty per cent. less than in 1880; the yield per acre promises to be not greater this year than last.

Third—Only about 7,500,000 bushels of wheat reman in the hands of millers and in elevators in the country, and not more than one-third of the quantity will reach our lake ports, unless prices should advance so much as to induce millers to ship their reserves instead of grinding the grain.

If these estimates be correct the situation resolves itself into this: We have enough wheat on hand to supply our own needs up to the next harvest, and that harvest will supply all the wheat wanted for bread and seed in the United States during the next crop year. But nothing more. Not a bushel for export!

A spirited and fastidious girl of Ottawa, Ill., declined to be married, though the guests were assembled and the bridegroom waiting, because the train of her dress did not hang properly. Expostulation was in vain. She said that she had put a great amount of thought and money into the garment and it would be a life long sorrow to her if she wore it when conscious that it was not a success. The wedding was postponed a week.

Correspondence.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood, that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

SIR,—I noticed in the last issue of the Advance, an article defending the conduct of certain parties passing through Maxwell, from Flesherton on the 24th of May.

It is evident that the reply was made either by the parties using the insolence, or by some one for them, who knows no better than to countenance such conduct. Such slang phrases as "You are too fresh," etc., with the many others used, are in my estimation anything but lady-like, and do not apply very forcibly to persons walking quietly on the street.

I would suppose that the parties using such expressions were either a little green or "too fresh" themselves, unless they have purchased largely of, and used effectively that cargo of land salt lately brought to Flesherton.

I presume the juvenile of that village will be highly educated in all the slang of the day, under the fostering influence of such "respectable and refined" young ladies.

Their insults were by no means confined to the "two would be gentlemen in carpet slippers." Several others in the village were also attacked and abused.

Person sitting within their houses were not let alone. Nor did it stop in the village. A picnic party, from near Collingwood, was insulted in a similar manner at the lake, being called "Nottawa Bugs," etc.

What a noble record of their exploits! One of the party gave some of our villagers clearly to understand that they were ashamed of the actions of some of the party that day. I am surprised that any person in this village, knowing the circumstances, would countenance such conduct, but some are ever inclined to be meddlesome.

Now, I by no means wish to cast a slur upon the respectable people of Flesherton, but I ever shall discountenance such conduct as I have referred to.

I am glad to know that the cap fitted the right parties, and hope they may profit by it in future.

COUNTY ITEMS.

ONE OF THE SAVED.—Wm. Campbell, formerly of the Lake Shore, latterly of Markdale, and well known in Owen Sound, was one of the rescued ones at the late Victoria disaster. He jumped from the boat as she began to go to pieces, and reached the shore in safety. —Tribune.

ATTEMPTED BURGLARY.—An ineffectual attempt was made to burglarize the residence of Mr. W. Manders on Thursday night last. The night-walkers managed to effect an entrance into the kitchen, but in doing so disturbed the household, who in turn disturbed the marauder, and he vamossed without even getting a broken hairpin. It is plain that we have at least one of the light-fingered gentry in town, and it is also plain that it will be to the advantage of residents to look after their valuables with an unusually sharp eye.—Tribune.

COUNTY COURT.—The County Court commenced here on Tuesday. Judge McPherson being unwell and unable to attend Court, S. J. Lane, Esq., presides. There are two criminal cases to be tried, and eight civil suits Mr. Geo. Corbet, Jr., is Foreman of the Grand Jury. We will give a report of the proceedings in our next issue.—Advertiser.

ABOUT SMALL-POX.

Conflagrations startle a man, tornadoes make him nervous, earthquakes take his mind off his business for eight or ten minutes; but if you want to frighten a big six-footer right out of his boots just yell "small-pox" at him. Not one person in a hundred will pass a small-pox sign on a house without taking the outer edge of the walk, and during a scare every ache and pain which grabs a man is supposed to be the forerunner of the dread disease.

The other day a prominent Detroit physician received a call from a man who carried an alarmed look in the corners of his eyes and who said that he came for a prescription.

"What ailse you ?" queried the doctor.

"I feel bad all over."

"Any particular symptoms ?"

"Well I've got a back ache and I'm feverish, and my throat is sore, and I've got a pain in my chest."

The doctor took a look at his tongue, felt of his pulse, and said:

"I think two or three quinine pills will brace you up, and I'll give you a gargle for your throat"

The man made no further remarks, but after he had pocketed his prescription and got out doors he turned around and shook his fist at the office and growled out:

"I'm going to have small-pox, and and I know it, and the minute I begin to break out I'll come hear and give it to everybody around the house, clear down to your old bob-tailed Scotch terrier and cross-eyed cat!"

We would call attention to the advertisement of Mr. J. H. Hamilton, of Thornbury, which will be found in another column. His Barley Forks, (which we consider unequalled) and other goods, can be had of any of our merchants.

As one of our medical men was strolling along the sidewalk last Saturday night, he noticed a man taking it easy in the shade of one of our large brick blocks. Upon asking him what ailed him, and what he was doing there, the fellow replied, "'Zall right, Doc', (hic) jest lookin' at ze 'clipse."

Says the Toronto Mail:—Next Sunday, according to Professor Grimmer, is the day upon which this world's affairs are to be wound up. We are, according to the learned and very scientific professor, to be subjected to a tremendous heat in which no living creature can exist. The world is to approach the sun with wonderfull velocity and is to be consumed by fire. It seems wicked to neglect Professor Grimmer's warning, but in view of the fact that no one knows the day nor the hour, the Professor's prophecy may be considered a piece of impertinence. Besides, does not Mr. Vennor predict cool weather for the entire month of June?

New Barley Fork.—Mr. J. H. Hamilton of Thornbury, manufacturer of Cradles, Spinning Wheels, &c., is now manufactaring a very useful patent Barley Fork. It is without doubt the best Barley Fork made. An extra finger is so attatched to the handle as to prevent the grain sliding back on the pitcher, or being blown off by the wind. Farmers will at once precieve the benefit of such a fork.

Run Away.—On Wedensday, a team belonging to Mr. Geo. Drew, took fright in rear of Noble's blacksmith shop, and ran out on Toronto Street. They had only gone a short distance when the tonge of the wagon fell from the neckyoke, and ran under the sidewalk breaking the tonge and one axle. Fortunately no person was hurt.

Trickett, the Australian oarsman, arrived in New York recently, and of course the irrepressible interviewer was on hand. Among other things that Trickett is reported to have said is that he had no wish to tackle Hanlan again, that he considered Ned the best man he ever met, and he had seen not a few. Of Ross he preferred to say nothing. There is some talk of Trickett challenging Riley, but there is nothing decided definitely as yet what course he intends to pursue.

He looks both hale and hearty and by appearance is growing with the times in the new parts of this Province.—Port Hope Times.

Another Schooner load of pine lumber and lath arrived this week at T. McNea's lumber yard.

The Farmers Advocate for June is to hand and is an exceptionably fine number. This Magazine is the only one of the kind published in Canada and every farmer should subscribe for it. In this number the Advocate offers a prize of $100,00 for the best herd of fat cattle for export. The herd to consist of three animals four years or under, the bona fide property of the exhibitor.

A Chicago artist who, it is said, can earn $10,000 a year, has been an habitual drunkard for five or six years. His wife has sued a saloon keeper for $25,000 damages on the ground that it is due to his influence that her husband squanders his money and neglects his work. He should have stuck to the water colors she thinks, and not have tinted his countenance as he has done.

The remarks of the Jersey City Journal have a widely extended application: "A society has a hundred members. To notify them of a meeting by postal card costs $1, and they pay it without comment. But if it costs a quarter to notify the members through the paper, they would prefer the postal card system. However, if a notice in the paper costs nothing, they jump at it as a lucky chance.

Cathartic Pills

Combine the choicest cathartic principles in medicine; in proportions accurately adjusted to secure activity, certainty, and uniformity of effect. They are the result of years of careful study and practical experiment, and are the most effectual remedy yet discovered for diseases caused by derangement of the stomach, liver, and bowels, which require prompt and effectual treatment. Ayer's Pills are specially applicable to this class of diseases. They act directly on the digestive and assimilative processes, and restore regular healthy action. Their extensive use by physicians in their practice, and by all civilized nations, is one of the many proofs of their value as a safe, sure, and perfectly reliable purgative medicine. Being compounded of the concentrated virtues of purely vegetable substances, they are positively free from calomel or any injurious properties, and can be administered to children with perfect safety.

Ayer's Pills are an effectual cure for Constipation or Costiveness, Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Loss of Appetite, Foul Stomach and Breath, Dizziness, Headache, Loss of Memory, Numbness, Biliousness, Jaundice, Rheumatism, Eruptions and Skin Diseases, Dropsy, Tumors, Worms, Neuralgia, Colic, Gripes, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Gout, Piles, Disorders of the Liver, and all other diseases resulting from a disordered state of the digestive apparatus.

As a Dinner Pill they have no equal.

While gentle in their action, these Pills are the most thorough and searching cathartic that can be employed, and never give pain unless the bowels are inflamed, and then their influence is healing. They stimulate the appetite and digestive organs; they operate to purify and enrich the blood, and impart renewed health and vigor to the whole system.

Chicago is disturbed over its increasing death rate, and with some show of reason, too. Last week the deaths were 361, while in the same period in 1879 they were but 138, and in 1880, 178. Of these 361 deaths, 230 were of children under 5 years of age, and the diseases of which they died were in nearly nine cases out of ten due to filth or preventable causes. Chicago has never known a seacn when diseases were so fatal among children as this year.

R. J. SPROULE'S

GREAT ANNUAL

CLEARIG SALE,

AT THE

POST OFFICE STORE,

FLESHERTON.

In order to make room for heavy Spring Importations now arriving daily, I have decided reducing my present large and well selected and assorted stock of

GENEARAL DRY GOODS, FURS, MILLIERY,

Ready-Made Clothing,

BOOTS AND SHOES,

Hats, Caps and Groceries

TO THE LOWEST POINT POSSIBLE,

and in order to do so,

Will Sell at and Under COST,

FOR THE NEXT THIRTY DAYS.

The stock is all new, well bought, and well worth the attention of the closet buyers. In GROCERIES you will find evrything of First-Class Value.

As I do not pursue the course of some of our windy Merchants of our neighboring Villages, of sending out numerous samples of cheap trash (with unscrupulous recommendations) outside our natural business relations, in order to impress the public that they are not properly treated by their more honorable dealers, and draw custom from the many.

You will find everything that I sell just as I represent it, and as good value as you can possibly get for your money anywhere, as I have always held that honorable dealing is the only true course for a business man.

My Groceries are all bought for strictly nett cash, consequently I can and will sell at

The Lowest Possible Prices!

For CASH and FARM PRODUCE

BUT NOT FOR CREDIT.

I have also in stock and for sale, a large quantity of

PURE SEED GRAIN!

Such as White Russian, Glasgow, Red Chaff, and other varieties of Spring wheat. Also Pure Clean Peas, Oats and Barley. Prime Timothy and Clover Seed; also Fresh Garden Seeds, and as it pays each and every Farmer to sow clean seed, you will make money by paying a few cents extra, and purchasing a good article.

I am now selling large quantities of

COARSE LAND SALT,

FOR MANURE,

Which will pay every Farmer Five Dollers for every one idvected in it, and as I am anxious that every Farmer this locality and neighboring Townships shall try it, have decided in selling in five and barrel lots at the Lowest Cash Price laid down by the car direct from the Manufacturers, and bought for nett cash at Bottom Prices.

I would also intimate that my

SPRING IMPORTATIONS

ARE ARRIVING DAILY,

And I will have opened out and show

On The 1st of April,

One of the Largest and Best Assorted Stocks ever brought into this part of the country.

Thanking one and all for liberal patronage in the past, and soliciting an inspection befor purchasing elsewhere,

THE NEW VERSION: A MUTILATION AND PROFANATION.

DR. TALMAGE'S SERMON LAST SUNDAY MORNING, JUNE 5, 1881.

"And when they came to Nachon's threshing floor, Uzzah put forth his hand to the ark of God and took hold of it, for the oxen shook it. And the anger of the Lord was kindled against Uzzah, and God smote him there for his error."—2 SAMUEL 6: 6 and 7.

THE sacred chest of acacia wood called the ark of the covenant, about four feet by two, golden lidded, golden hinged, and mounted by two cherubims, and made to contain the divine covenant, and at one time holding a bowl of wilderness manna and Aaron's rod that budded, was the most sacred box ever formed. It was in the presence of that chest that God communed with the Israelites. Improperly to touch that box was death. All the people understood it. On one occasion fifty thousand and seventy people lost their lives by irreverence to the box. The circumstances of my text were these: That precious chest was being transferred on a cart drawn by oxen. Now, oxen are an uncertain team, especially when on a hot day they come near a shadow; for without reference to the safety of that which they draw, they dart aside for the cool place. For this or some other reason the oxen with this precious chest made some sudden start and the box rocked, and Uzzah, the driver, put his hand upon it. He had no business to touch it under any circumstances. Under the judgment of God this driver drops dead by the cart wheel.

We have a sacred chest, an ark of the covenant, the Bible. Like the ark of old it contains the divine covenant and the manna for poor wildernessed pilgrims, and the rod of trouble that has budded into fragrant consolation, and over it the mercy seat. It is so sacred that the hands of worldly criticism and the hands of pedantry and the hands of useless disturbance had better keep off it. Wrongly to touch that omnipotent box—which is our ark of the covenant—is to die.

We are in the midst of

consequent from the new revision of the Scriptures. We had a translation two hundred and seventy years old, embosomed in the warmest affections of all the good of earth, interlocked with the best secular literature, and pronounced by Webster and the Washington Irvings as the masterpiece of English prose; the translation at work blessing and revolutionizing the nations for good, and all Christendom satisfied with the translation, except a few doctors of divinity. But two companies, an Old Testament Company and a New Testament Company, have been busy for ten years changing the book, and a few days ago the New Testament Company launched the results of their labors upon the world. After great universal advertisement of the intended book and the dramatic withholding of the book till a certain day, and then withholding it till a still further day the work comes forth. The English printing press keeps a tight grip on the copyright, and when our American publishing houses offered a large sum for reproducing the book simultaneously, the English presses rejected the offer in cavalier and abrupt style.

Two million copies are sold in two days. What a compliment to the Scriptures! Yes, but be not deceived. Did the two million people suddenly become passionately fond of Scripture reading? No. These two million Bibles went into houses where the Bible was already enthroned. All those of us who honored the book wanted to know what these men had been doing for ten years with our favorite book. Had we a statue in New York City Hall Park that had been the pride of the nation since its foundation, and sculptured and lifted at vast expense, and thirty-eight men for ten years had been busy under cover, changing that statue, on the morning the cover dropped and the changes should be revealed, there would be no room in the streets or squares approximate to hold the spectators.

In addition to this general curiosity which we all felt about the iconoclasm of parts of our best book, the denominations of religionists were anxious to see if there peculiar views would be favored or opposed by the new version. The Baptists wanted to see what the revisionists had done for immersion, and the Presbyterians what had been done about the decrees, and the Episcopalians to see what had been done about Apostolic succession, and the Methodists to see what had been done about free grace, and the Congregationalists to see what had been done about the democracy of religion, and the Universalists what had been done with future punishment, and so we all rushed for the revised New Testament.

The Church and the world have the famous revision before them. We are

ASKED FOR OUR VERDICT.

We all have a vote. The humblest person in this house has a vote. "What do you think of it?" is the perpetual question. Some say, "I like it very much." Others say, "I like it to a certain extent." Others say, "I want a year to consider it," which means, "I want to hear what others say, and then I will say the same thing." There are many who do not want to offend the ecclesiastical Ring, for each denomination has such a ring, and there is as much bossism in the Church of God as in the world, and monopoly would rule the kingdom of Christ, if it could, as it rules the money markets and legislatures of the world. There are two voices that have not yet been fully heard.

First, the unpretending Christian scholarship of America and England is displeased more than it can express at many of the changes made, and the other voice is the voice of the great masses of Christian people, nine hundred and ninety-nine out of every thousand, who regret in the depths of their soul that this revision has been attempted, and who look upon it as a desecration and a profanation and a mutilation and a religious outrage. That last sentiment will come up like the surges of the Atlantic after a storm of ten days.

I shall give you my reasons for rejecting this new revision of the Scriptures. I am willing to take it as a commentary, and to stand it respectfully on my bookshelf beside other human opinions of the word of God. But to put it upon my private study or in my family room or on my pulpit, as a substitute for King James' translation, I never will. I put my hand on the old book and take the oath of allegiance. So help me God! I am glad to know that Lord Shaftesbury and the Archbishop of York, and many other strong men on the other side of the sea, are anti-revisionists. But supported by high authority or no authority, I here and now take my stand.

These fifty men for ten years busy in tinkering the New Testament agree in the statement that they find no new doctrine. Differing on many other things they all agree here. If it had been found that the old translation was teaching any false ideas of God or the soul or eternity, I would say, by all means give us a new revision and put forth immediate and mightiest effort for the organized obliteration of the old translation. The world cannot afford to have wrong notions of God and the soul and eternity. But the new version keeps all the old doctrines. Then what good reason could there be for this disturbance of sacred association, this loosening of the faith of Christendom.

I. It is too late to reconstruct the Bible. When King James' translation was made the Bible was a sparsely circulated book, and the changes made caused no perturbation. But this revision of 1881 is a depreciation of 300 million copies of the Bible out in the world and doing their work. It assails the magnificent liturgy of the Episcopal Church and makes all her prayer books vast inaccuracies. It makes the inscriptions on the graves of your dead untrue. It reflects on the old family Bible, and to the uninitiated leaves nothing about it certain save the record of marriages and births and deaths. If this new revision succeed, for the next few years you will have to watch your children's evening offering of the Lord's prayer and jerk them up short before they run over the "evil one" into an uninspired doxology. It is an out and out war against all the religious literature of the age. Away with your Cruden's and Brown's concordances. Your Bible dictionaries wrong. Matthew Henry's commentary wrong, Kitto's readings wrong, Zahn's archæology wrong. All your religious books wrong. In matters of religious accuracy it means chaos and old night.

Who undertook this impertinence on the other side of the sea? I know not the qualifications of the archbishops and archdeacons and professors who have done the work on the other side of the Atlantic. I understand that many of them are far from being the best scholars of Great Britain. I know that men with great titles are often the merest accidents and their high office no sign of scholarship. D. D., L. L. D., and F. R. S., are often the heavy baggage of a very slow train. I only judge them by this revision. It is pedantic and capricious, and false to the principle which they declared at the outset would guide them; namely, that they would make no unnecessary changes.

As to the work done by the American revisionists, I have this to say, one gentleman here takes the responsibility of choosing a group of American scholars to revise the New Testament. The gentleman taking this responsibility having been born and educated in a foreign land was not especially adapted to make wise selection among American scholars. This gentleman in making the selection derided the living and dead generations of Bible readers by saying and reiterating: "The Christian people for years have been drinking the the water of life from the jawbone of a royal ass." This gentleman selects a group of scholars to revise the New Testament, and excepting four of them they are unknown outside of their little circle. I could call the roll of a hundred scholars superior to all these employed in this work except the illustrious Dr. Woolsey. If such a work must needs be done, why not call in a convention of all the great and good scholars of America, and have them make selection of revisionists? Where in this New Testament Company is the scholarship of Princeton, and Columbia, and Middletown, and New Brunswick?

II. The work is a

which will never be adopted if all the people fearless of criticism and rebuff speak out their real sentiments. To come down to the mechanical arrangement of this new version, I vehemently reject the mode of putting the Scripture in columns like a solid newspaper column instead of the division of verses as in our present translation. It is the charm of our old book that a business man or a wife overborne with household cares, or an invalid with no power of consecutive thought, can take up a verse and carry it all day.

I open a page of this new version and I find a paragraph a column and a half long. By this new translation one will be tempted to think "I can't take the whole page, so I will take nothing." That shortest verse in the Bible, an ocean of sympathy compressed in two words—Jesus wept—is set in a solid paragraph of one column and a half. You can find it if you look long enough for it; but it needs to stand out isolated and alone in its grandeur, and tenderness, and pathos, and omnipotence of meaning. Another mechanical misfortune is the dropping of the headings of the chapters. It is an important part of the old translation. We all want to know what the chapter is about before we begin to read it.

III. I reject the new version for

ITS AMAZING TRIVIALITY.

You have more control over your sense of the ridiculous than I have if you can read without a smile some of the changes made or proposed. You remember Christ's sermon where He speaks of the inaptitude of putting new wine into old bottles. In our revision of 1881 it is rendered: "No man putteth new wine into old wine skins, else the skins burst and the wine is spilled and the skins perish. But they put new wine into fresh wine skins." The change is evidently made to show that the bottles of olden time were made out of the skins of animals, but is it not just as easy to explain the bottles to the people as to explain the wine-skins? "Show me a penny," said Christ wishing from the kingly stamp on it to illustrate its earthly currency. That will not do, say the American revisionists. Instead of "Show me a penny," "show me a denarius." The revision changes the "beasts" of Revelation into "living creatures." But will you not have to explain the living creatures as well as the beasts. The old translation was too much for the delicacy of the American part of the New Testament Company. Where it says of Simon Peter "he girt his coat about him for he was naked," the American Committee suggests that it should read in the margin "had on his undergarment only." The old translation said: "Neither do men light a candle and put it under a bushel but on a candlestick." The revisers reject "candlestick" for "stand."

The new revision makes other changes of how little importance judge ye when it says that the old translation which reads "into a mountain" ought to be "into the mountain;" where the old translation says "into a ship" it ought to be "the ship," and instead of "a teacher in Israel" it ought to be "the teacher," instead of "a good fight" it ought to be "the good fight," and instead of "a crown of righteousness," it ought to be "the crown of righteousness," and instead of "a bushel" "the bushel," and instead of "covered with waves" it ought to read "becoming covered," and instead of "nets break" it ought to read "were breaking," and instead of "straining at a gnat," it ought to be "straining out a gnat" and other infinitesimals of difference with which I shall not worry your patience.

Thirty-eight men for ten years hunt for inaccuracies, and all this only a foretaste of what we shall have when after three years more of labor the forty-one members of the old Testament Company will launch their work. I have sometimes wondered what the thirty-eight gentlemen of the New Testament Company and the forty-one gentlemen of the Old Testament Company might have accomplished for good if they had spent the last ten in preaching the old translation instead of finding fault with it, and if the hundreds of thousands of dollars which directly and indirectly have been expended in the preparation of this new revision had been put into the American Bible Society and the British Bible Society for the spreading abroad of that old translation out of whose loins civilization and Christianity were born, and under whose influence England and America are what they are, and the dark skies of heathendom begin to flame with the morning.

What the world wants is not critics but evangels; not men to knock the doxology out of the Lord's prayer but men to make all nations kneel proclaimingly at the feet of Christ. "Thine is the kingdom, and the power, and the glory for ever, Amen." At the opening of service to-day I led you in the Lord's prayer according to the new version, stopping before the doxology, but I will never do it again, either in public or private unless in my dying prayer my breath should go out at that point, and then I would finish it in heaven, for that is the only part of the Lord's prayer appropriate for both Church militant and Church triumphant.

IV. I reject this revision because it comes

AT A MOST INOPPORTUNE DATE.

The great battle between sin and righteousness is fully open and all the battteries are unlimbered. While the forces of heaven and hell are in hand to hand fight it is asked that we stop

SHAME AND SUICIDE.

AN ORANGEVILLE GIRL ATTEMPTS TO TAKE HER LIFE IN A BUFFALO DEN.

BUFFALO, June 14.—Mrs. Lavidia McCockrell, in a moment of remorse, occasioned by meditation on the fast life which she had recently begun to lead, attempted to commit suicide last night. According to a statement which she made it appears that some years ago she led a very fast life at Orangeville, Ont. McCockrell became fascinated with her and they were married. The couple removed to Bradford, where they lived happily until Mrs. McCockrell discovered, as she says, that her husband was unfaithful to her. In a fit of despair she resolved to resume her life of shame, and three weeks ago came to Buffalo to carry out her resolution, entering one of the lowest dens on Canal street. She woman took a teaspoonful of morphine, but prompt medical assistance saved her life. She is about 30 years of age and is the mother of two children, who are with their father at Bradford.

A FRENCH HEROINE

One of the celebrities of the Paris market is a woman who keeps a vegetable stall and who wears the red ribbon of the Legion of Honor. This woman, Annette Drevon by name, was formerly cantiniere to the Thirty-second Regiment of Infantry and to the Second Regiment of Zouaves, which she accompanied through the campaigns of Africa and Italy and during the war with Germany. Of the seven or eight female members of the Legion of Honor she is the only one who received the distinction for an act of valor upon the field of battle; and she was decorated after the battel of Magenta for rescuing the regimental colors from two Australian soldiers who had captured them. During the war with Germany she was with the Forty second Regiment in Metz, and upon the surrender of that fortress she was sent off to Germany with the survivors. Just outside of Metz a Bavarian soldier insulted her, and she pulled out her revolver and shot him through the heart. For this she was condemned to death, and would have been shot but for the intervention of Prince Frederick Charles, who hearing that a woman was to be executed, made inquiries into the case, the result being that Annette Drevon was set at liberty. She lived in great poverty for some time, but Marshal MacMahon happening to hear about her gave her a sum of money sufficient to enable her to set up the stall at which she now sells carrots, turnips, and other aids to digestion.

IRON IN OXFORD COUNTY.—A correspondent of the Brantford Telegram writes: "No little excitement prevails in this section over the fact that a large bed of iron ore has been discovered on the farm of Nelson Muma, one mile south of Drumbo. Fabulous prices have been already offered Mr. Muma for the bed, but he is inclined to know more of its value prior to selling. In fact many in the neighborhood are so excited that they actually go out at night with spades and dig in any ravine on their farms to try and find the hidden treasure, without being observed."

JAMES BOWIE

ANECDOTES OF THE INVENTOR OF THE BOWIE KNIFE.

On one occasion Bowie, whose reputation had reached Memphis, arrived by boat at that city, or rather at what was then known as the Third Chickasaw Bluffs. The bank from the boat landing to the top was about one hundred and fifty feet high, and a large number of people were watching the arrival of the strangers. Looking down one of them recognized Bowie as he stepped over the gang plank and made the remark, "There comes Jim Bowie."

"What!" shouted a big flat-boat man, then known as the "Memphis Terror," as he looked down the bluff; "What! Jim Bowie? That's the fellow I've been looking for months. Jim Bowie! Why——him, I'll whip him so quick he won't know what hurt him. I'll whip him if I never whip another man as long as I live! Stand by, boys and see the fun!"

Bowie came slowly up the bank. In his hand he carried an old umbrella. He had no weapon and was evidently not expecting or in fact prepared for a fight. The ... did not escape the now thoroughly interested spectators. Up ... the ... man, promptly, as Bowie reached the top of the bluff. "Is your name Jim Bowie?" He asked.

Bowie replied that it was.

"Then," shouted the flatboatman, as he squared off, "I think you a d——d rascal and I'm going to whip you right here and now."

Bowie was a man of few words. He stood and gazed at his adversary, who was more emboldened than ever. "I think you're a d——d coward," he yelled, "and I'm going to knock your head off," and so saying the "Memphis Terror" advanced to the conflict.

Bowie never flinched. His keen eye was fixed on the "Terror," who at this moment was face to face with him. But as the man of Memphis drew a dirk from his breast, Bowie stepped back a foot and thrust out his umbrella as if to keep his antagonist at bay.

The "Memphis Terror," seized the umbrella with one hand, made a pass at the inventor of the famous knife with the other. In doing so he pulled the umbrella to himself, leaving free in the right hand of Bowie his murderous weapon, which till this moment had been concealed in the folds of the impromptu sheath. The sight of Bowie standing there, with the knife in his hand and the gleam of vengeance in his eyes, was too much for the "Terror."

From the Bouncing bully he became transformed into a craven coward in a second.

His face turned pale and his knees trembled, while the dirk dropped from his hands as he gazed on Bowie's weapon with staring eyes. "Put it up; put away that scythe, for God's sake, Bowie, I was mistaken in my man."

Bowie advanced a step.

"Don't—don't kill me!" besecched the bully; "for God's sake, don't go for me with that scythe and I swear to you I'll never attack another man as long as I live."

Bowie looked at his now thoroughly demoralized opponent for a moment, and then turning on his heel with the expression "Coward," walked rapidly away. Thenceforth the "Memphis Terror" was a changed man, and until the day of his death he never lost the sobriquet of "Put up that scythe."

Bowie was very fond of music and dancing, and on occasions where he would enjoy both he invariably appeared in the best of humor, and the reserve which had begun to characterize him at this time appeared to thaw out. It was on one occasion at a dance, when he was in such favorable conditions, that I had an opportunity of a free and easy chat with him about some of the encounters in which he had been engaged. Referring to the disparity in size between himself and some of the men whom he had met in conflict I asked him how he regarded his chances under such circumstances.

"Suppose," said I, referring to a man of herculean build, who stood near, "suppose you were attacked by such a man as Hob Johnson there. What then?"

"Oh," dryly responded Bowie, "I would cut him down to my size!"

WHAT THE BASHFUL CLERK WANTED

Old Pinchem sat in his private office the other day figuring up his profits for May, when his head clerk, looked as pale as a sheep and as red as a cow by turns, entered and began:

Mr. Pinchem, I—I——"

"Have you got those goods off for Kalamazoo?" interupted the old man.

"Yes, sir, they gone off. Mr. Pinchem, I have long——"

"And about that order for starch?"

"That has been attended to, sir. Mr. Pinchem, I have long wanted to speak to you."

"Ah! speak to me. Why, I thought you spoke to me fifty times a day."

"Yes, sir, I know, but this is private matter."

"Private? Oh! Ah! Wait till I see how much we made on the last 10,000 pounds of soap. Six times four is twenty-four; five times two is ten, and two carry are twelve; three times seven are twenty-one and one—ah, well, go ahead; I'll finish this afterwards."

"Mr. Pinchem, I have been with you ten long years."

"Ten, eh? Long years, eh? Any longer than any other years? Go ahead."

"And I have always tried to do my duty."

"Have, eh? Go on."

"And I now make bold—"

"Hold on! What is there bold about it. But never mind—I'll hear you out."

"Mr. Pinchem, I want to ask—ask—I want to ask—"

"Well, why don't you ask then? I don't see why you don't ask, if you want to."

Mr. Pinchem, I want to ask you for—for—for—"

"You want to ask me for the hand of my daughter. Ah? Why, didn't you speak right out? She's yours, my boy! Take her and be happy. You might have had her two years ago if you had spoke of it. Go 'long now i'm busy."

"Mr. Pinchem."

"What, you here yet? Well, what is it."

"I want to ask you for—for—"

"Din't I give her to you, you rascal."

"Yes, but what I wanted to ask you for was, not the hand of your daughter, but for a raise of salary."

"Oh, that was it, eh? Well, sir, that is an entirely different matter, and it requires time for serious thought and earnest consultation. Return to your work, and some time next fall I'll see about giving you a raise of a dollar a week. Six times four are twenty-four and two to carry, and three times——" —M. Quad.

to discuss whether our weapons might not be hammered into a little better shape, whether we can't have a better tassel put on the hilt of our sword since they make better tassels now than they used to. While the apocalyptic angel is flying through the midst of heaven proclaiming to all nations, and kindreds, and people the Gospel, we are criticising the angel's plumes and trying to catch him till we can stroke his feathers another way.

V. Again I reject this new revision for

of many in the truth of the Bible. Out and out infidelity, after hundreds of years of bombardment, instead of demolishing, has only driven the Bible further into the affections of the world. The chief danger is from the mistaken friends of the Bible. Unbelief and scepticism are not logical. But you have taken men as they are. The revisionists begin their work by saying there are in the New Testament ten thousand mistakes, and that there are one hundred and fifty thousand varieties of reading to the New Testament. The devil takes these statistics, which you can manage without damage to yourself, and he makes them the everlasting ruin of a great multitude. This movement will turn more souls into stark infidelity than the thirty-eight gentlemen of the New Testament Company will ever argue out of it, though they should live the eight hundred and ninety-five years of Mahalaleel, the nine hundred and sixty-two years of Jared, and the nine hundred and sixty-nine years of Methusaleh aggregated.

The greatest work of the last two hundred years has been to have the people understand that this was the word of God; the truth, the whole truth, and nothing but the truth. And now you say there are only 10,000 mistakes in it, and only about 135,000 readings; 40 changes to be made in the Sermon on the Mount. You say they are not radical mistakes. Why, then, all this excitement of the public mind? Look out lest while with torches you are hunting for rats in the cellar, you do not set in conflagration the august temple.

For ten years, and ever since I heard of the movement, I have deplored it. But there has been no good time to speak on the subject till now. I may be scoffed at for my words in very high places, but I am only putting into words the sentiment of more people than ever thought strongly the same way on any one subject since the world was created, and they will be heard; and this is only the muttering of the on-coming tempest of popular indignation cis-Atlantic and trans-Atlantic. Hands off the ark of the covenant.

THE END OF THE WEDGE.

VI. I reject this new version because it opens the door for revisions innumerable. Have you any idea that these changes will stop here? In the back part of this New Testament there are twelve pages of practical protest on the part of the Americans of the New Testament Company, against the revision of the Englishmen and Irishmen of the same company. Hence, we shall have another revision to revise this, and another revision to revise that, and as in 1823, Noah Webster published his revision of the Bible, and Professor Noyes and Moses Stuart and Bishop Ellicott, and Dean Alford offered their revision of different portions of the scripture, so we shall have revision on top of revision, revisions in flocks, revisions in herds, revisions in swarms; and after a while Presbyterian revision and Baptist revision and Episcopalian revision—perhaps I shall issue a revision! and the time will go on if we allow this thing to pass without denunciation until the church will go into paroxysms of revision and there will be nothing intelligent, satisfactory, and appropriate left either in Bible or prayer-book, but the ejaculation, "Good Lord deliver us!"

These discoverers of 10,000 mistakes, and the 135,000 different readings have actually got hold of the music of the angels over Bethlehem. If those angels had known that they were within hearing distance of the New Testament Company, they would not have sung so loud. Instead of the translation which says, "On earth peace, good will toward men," it is to read "on earth peace among men in whom He is well pleased." The rythm gone, the sweep of meaning gone, the Christmas carol choked till it is black in the face. I wonder if the brethren will not go on, now they have their hand in, and give us a new revision of Handel's "Messiah," and Haydn's "Creation," and chisel out a few improvements on Powers' Greek Slave, and touch up Angelo's "Last Judgment," and improve the sunrise and the sunset, and show us the aorist of the spring blossoming of last year, and let us have universal revision.

Meanwhile to private Christians let me give

A WORD OF PRACTICAL ADVICE.

Hold on to your pocket Bibles, your family Bibles, your church Bibles.

THE OLD BIBLE IS GOOD ENOUGH FOR ME.

It has brought so many sons to glory I am hoping through its teaching to get safely there myself. The old Bible is good enough for you. If you have money that you want to spend in augmenting your scriptural knowledge, do not spend it on this mutilation of the Scriptures, but purchase Scott's or Clarke's or Barnes' or Jacobus' or Alexander's or Bridge's or Stuart's or French's or Plummer's commentaries. The three hundred million copies of King James' translation will soon vote down the four or ten million of the new revision. Besides it will take more than seventy-nine revisionist to revise the memory of whole generations of Bible readers. The Bible as you now quote it, will be the Bible as quoted till the end of time.

The only revision your Bible will bear, will be the marks of your own lead pencils in the margin, stating how certain passages have been illumined in your own solaced experience. I should not wonder, if upon some of the consolatory passages of the Old Testament, you wrote your own commentary not with pen and ink, but by the indellible signature of a tear. Better than Gustave Dore's illustration of the Scripture would be that Bible illumination. I also advise all private Christians all up and down the earth, and teachers of Sunday-schools, parents and all ministers of the gospel who have unterrified utterance, to be quick and vehement in their protest against this scholarly profanation. Speak out now or forever hold your peace.

I pray God that this excitement about the new revision may wake us all up to a higher appreciation of that great monarch of books before which the Iliads and the Odysseys and the Korans and the Vedas and the Shasters and the Zend-Avestas and the national libraries of earth must kneel. By its torch may we find our pathway to the end of the pilgrimage, and on its pillow of gracious promises may we drop off into the calm, cool dreamless slumber that waits for the first resurrection.

THE trial of Mr. Geo. Parish, manager of the Thames Navigation Company, and Capt. Rankin, commander of the steamer Victoria, for manslaughter, commenced on Monday last, but was adjourned until the 27th inst., as the magistrate before whom the case was being tried is a major in the militia, and had to leave London for the camp.

THE state of affairs in Ireland seems to be slightly improved, owing in a great measure to the influence of the Priests, who are advising the people to avoid coming in contact with the military, and to wait patiently for the passage of the Land Bill. The opposition to the latter is almost altogether withdrawn and there is every prospect of its passing in a short time. There is some fear, however, of its being quashed in the House of Lords, or so mutilated as to do away with its usefulness.

THE belief that the affairs of the world would be wound up on Sunday last, was more wide spread than was generally supposed. In Ottawa, Montreal, and several other places, many sat up all Saturday night waiting with quaking heart and trembling limbs, for the event to take place. To add to their terror a slight shock of earthquake was felt in Ottawa and Montreal. In the latter place one individual was found at the top of the mountain in a demented state and a young lady is said to have gone hopelessly insane. To comfort the nervous and weak-minded people we may state that the Rev. H. Grattan Guinness states in his work entitled the "Approaching end of the Age" that the end of the present dispensation will not take place until 1919; after that the millenium. In the meantime the old world jogs on the even tenor of its way just the same as if we had no Vennor, Prof. Grimer, or Moses Oates, and people are again breathing freely.

EUPHRASIA COUNCIL.

AN adjourned meeting of the Court of Revision for the Township of Euphrasia was held at 10 o'clock a.m., on the 11th inst.

Members of Council all present.

Wm. Gilray's name placed on the roll as Farmer's Son.

Noble Clark assessed W. ½ of E. ½ of lot 28 con. 6, in addition to his other assessment. Total assessment, $2500.

Abraham Taylor's name placed on the roll as owner of S. ½ lot 29 con. 4.

Wm. Moore, Clarksburg, assessed for S. E. ¼ of lot 10 con. 4.

A few more changes were made in the Assessment Roll, and the following resolution passed:

Mr. Gilray moved, seconded by Mr. Boyd, that the Court of Revision for the Township of Euphrasia, for the year 1881, having heard all appeals made against the assessment for the current year, and having carefully considered the same, and made all changes in the said Assessment Roll for the said year, which seemed just and right, said Court now hereby finally revises said Assessment Roll, and orders the Clerk to certify to it as being so revised.—Carried.

The Court arose.

Council resumed at 2 o'clock p.m.

Minutes of last session of Council read and approved.

The Reeve and Mr. Loughead were appointed a committee to get Griffith's bridge properly fixed.

J. D. Crabtree was re-appointed Treasurer at a salary of $100, and a By-law was passed accordingly.

The Clerk was ordered to communicate with the Crown Land Department concerning the resuming of lot 14, con. 8.

Messrs. Fawcett, Boyd and Loughead were appointed a committee to take such action as they may deem prudent in the repairing of the 7th line at lot 25.

The application of Messrs. Ellis & Plewis for improving the 4th line at lot 6, accepted on condition that the parties interested furnish the teams gratis, the labor to be performed under the supervision of J. Plewis, pathmaster.

The Reeve was authorized to ascertain what can prudently be done in the way of cutting down a hill on 12 and 13 side line, con. 2.

A proposal made by the Corporation of Holland to expend $50 on the Town line of Euphrasia and Holland, on condition that Euphrasia do likewise, was laid before the Council and accepted.

George Vickers was appointed pathmaster instead of Wm. McElroy.

Gilbert Cooledge was appointed pathmaster instead of Wm. Sewell.

The Reeve was instructed to correspond with the Reeve of Collingwood T'p with regard to the southerly end of the town line Euphrasia and Collingwood.

The Reeve, Deputy Reeve, and Clerk were appointed to examine the Collectors' Rolls for 1880 with a view to the immediate payment of any balances that may be due by the Collectors.

The Treasurer was ordered to remit to Thos. Gamey $2, being part of expense of arbitration.

The Reeve's orders were issued on the Treasurer to pay as follows: To Robt. Hetherington, $10.87, for work on roads: John Clugston, $80, salary as Assessor for 1881; Robt. Dunlop, $30, part salary for current year; Robt. Dunlop, $2.50, for notifying for Court of Revision; John Pickerin, $6 for relief to Mrs. Grey, an indigent; Christopher Kelley, $8, for road work.

On motion being made and seconded the Council adjourned until the last Saturday in July.

ROBERT DUNLOP, Clerk.

PROTON DISTRICT LODGE.

THE Proton District L. O. L. met at the lodge room of No. 1136, on June 14th. They were received by Bro. Kennel, who also attended to their teams. Bro. Kennel is noted for the warm and generous manner with which he welcomes any and all who may call at his house.

The meeting opened at 4 o'clock p. m. when they immediately proceeded to discuss business in connection with the order.

Bro. Geo. Rutherford from Shelburne addressed the Meeting and endeavored to covince them that the District should celebrate the 12th at Dundalk.

Bro. N. A. McDonald spoke next, and stated that the members of his Lodge hid not wish to go to Dundalk this year. They had been out twice to meet the Lodges from that District, and they had never returned the visit.

Bro. T. Hanbury, said it was impossible for Dundalk Lodge to come to Hopeville, or to No. 1136 this year. There were Lodges coming to visit them from a distance and they would have to remain at home to receive them.

Bro. Wm. Armstrong spoke next, and said he thought the Dundalk Lodge had every night this year to come and make 1136 this year.

Bro. J. W. Morrow said he would like to see the District Lodge all at Hopeville, but he could not see how they could.

Bro. T. Hanbury again spoke and stated that under Existing circumstances it was impossible for Dundalk Lodge to come to Hopeville this 12th. It was moved by Cro. Hanbury seconded by Bro. N. A. McDonald, that the matter be left to each Lodge to go where they thought proper.—Carried.

The meeting then closed and tea was served.

All seemed to enjoy themselves. It is likely that 1202 will go to Dundalk and 1186 will go to Hopeville to celebrate the 12th this year.—COM.

FLESHERTON.

From our own Correspondent.

On Thursday, 16th inst; Mr. James Sullivan had four cattle run over by the night train going North, one of them was killed outright, and the others more or less injured.

Mr. William Cullen sold his lambs for $2,75 each, and is building a picket fence along the front of his farm.

Mr. J. W. Armstrong is moving a mountain at present, it is going slow but sure.

The hole in the bridge just north of the village was filled up in a sort of away a few weeks since, but is now nearly as bad as ever, last saturday a gentleman, a stranger, was driving along the road in his buggy and not expecting to meet with such a bad hole so near an enterprising village like Flesherton drove right into it before he was aware of it, and got the full beneft of the lurch. Result a broken spring. Others may have done the same, or worse but we have not heard of it as yet.

Two cars of lambs were shipped from Flesherton station on Monday last. One by Mr. McMullen, and the other by Mr. McDonald.

We are now getting a lot of new sidewalk laid down, and other improvements are in progress.

OSPREY.

From our own Correspondent.

Last week's rain gave the crops through this township an excellent appearance. They were greatly injured however by the recent frost, especially that which was on low and new land. Yet there is nothing to prevent all from looking forward to an abundant harvest.

AT BADJEROS CORNERS—Business is booming. Mr. McQuarrie's, steam saw mill is kept in constant operation by the clever and energetic foreman, Alexander McDougall. They were so very bussy last week that they thought no time could be lost by going to Collingwood to see the circus. But when it was known that the school children were to have an hoiliday, and that some person was to be absent from the old store, work was suspended for the space of at least 24 hours.

The Episcopal Methodist are building a new church 38x26, veneered with brick. The members of the Presbyterian church are rendering considerable assistance, particularly the merchants.

AT MCINTYRE—Neil McLean is erecting a large building about 60x30, in connection with his hotel. The lower part of the structure is to de used as a driving shed, and the upper part as a hall for public gatherings. Mr. McLean deserves great credit for the manner in which his house is conducted. He spares no pains in rendering every thing as comfortable as possible for the travellers, and exercises great care in the sale of spirits; therefore very few are to be seen about his place in a state of intoxication.

AT SINGHAMPTON—Messrs Grant & Son, have almost completed their stove factory. The engine is on the ground, and they expect to be in full operation in a few weeks.

NOTICE.—We wish it disinctly understood, that we do not hold ourselves reponsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

I am desirous of saying a word in regard to old maids, if you will allow me space in your valuable paper. I am an old maid of nineteen. I left school two years ago, and in that short time men's vulgarity has so disgusted me, that I have determined to live the life of an old maid. Being able to support myself and having a very comfortable home, I have been the recipient of fifty-seven letters from men who wish to be supported. That goes to show why old maids are so numerous. Some characteristics of an old maid are neatness, which is unusual in a man, and a desire to die a natural death, not an unexpected one, like most married ladies suffer nowadays. I should think men could be in a more profitable business than that of raking over the characters of old maids, which are too good to suit the disposition of man, who is conceited enough to think that if a lady looks in his direction she has been captivated by his supposed beauty and extremely attractive ways, and his never absent thought is, "I am the great I am."

OLD MAID.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

DEAR SIR,—I drew the bow not at a venture, but to strike, and I know what I am speaking about, and say nothing on supposition, nor take every thing for granted as Ratepayer does.

Of what is the County Council composed, but representatives from Township Councils.

Ratepayer says that they have a dispute as to which corporation should do the repairs. A nice family quarrel, and pretty representatives we send to the County Council, who cannot get Artemesia her share of road improvement. According to Ratepayer we have no roads we can call our own—they have a dispute. A pretty pass, truly, for such a thriving township. Something of the same sort existed when Mr. Kells took the Township in hand some years since. Would it not be advisable for the Council to seek his advice in settling their quarrel. I have noticed that his presence on Council days always had a very beneficial effect.

Ratepayer says—"Oh, no, his motive is transparent—bad". Sir, I have no motive further than the duty I owe to the place I live in, and should I ever be a Councillor, I will gain my election in a very different manner from those who at present circle round the Council Board; walking round with a stick late and early, shaking hands to the elbow, and "How is your wife?" and "how are you?" and kissing slobbering babies, and "who are you going to vote for on Monday?" No, sir, it is far beneath my dignity. In regard to my gloves, I intend to wear what I please, and if I see fit to buy a horse I can pay for it, and if I give a note for it my paper will not be at a discount. Can Ratepayer say as much? Nay, more, I have never been a beaten Councillor. In regard to the silly chattering, I am tired listening to the Sparrow with his mine we. If the gentleman had lost his horse in the swail, the law would soon have shown Ratepayer who had to keep the roads in repair, with not a little expense. The best man in the Council was shamefully treated, and kept out of the County Council because he stood up for his rights.

Ratepayer says the Council have never been apprised of the state of the roads. If a commercial man takes a salary from a firm, does a member of the firm go round with him and show him where to sell? The people have their busines to attend to instead of running after the Council and begging them to do their duty.

Ratepayer can see that the sidewalks are in a fearful state and extremely unsafe for the aged to walk on.

A stranger strolling round our village in the evening would frequently meet with unpleasant shocks by stumbling over the broken planks, and finally come to the conclusion that the said sidewalks belonged to some widow woman. Notwithstanding all this there must be no money expended—"there is a dispute." Rather take the risk of a broken leg, or a team lost in a broken bridge, or anything else. Shame on such narrow-mindedness. At a meeting held a short time since, to take into consideration the repairing of the roads to the station the Reeve would only promise $150, without calling a meeting of the ratepayers. One of our enterprising merchants got up and said if that was the best he could do for a road of such importance, we might as well all go home. The old adage will apply in this case, "lose the sheep, because they have to pay a farthing for tar."

If I hear from Ratepayer again I would advise him that he avoid personalities and slander, and discuss the question as a public one, or I will find out who he is.

When doctors disagree who shall decide. The people often decide by "throwing physic to the dogs,' and trying BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS, and the result is always satisfactory. Burdock Blood Bitters is the Multum in Parvo of medical science, curing all diseases of the Blood, Liver and Kidneys. A trial bottle only costs 10 cents. A dollar botle may save you a good many dollars in doctor's bills.

HURRAH FOR THE VOLUNTEERS.

On last Saturday, 11th inst., Mr. John Harrison had a barn raising, when Major Field, with his gallant troops, after a hard days drill, marched the distance of two miles and assistaned at it. Although the barn was 42x65, and of heavy material, they were only 17 minutes from the time they commenced until the rafters were safely placed on the top of the barn. There were 180 men present. After the barn was raised, the volunteers went through a portion of their drill and after receiving a hearty cheer they marched back to Flesherton. Long may they live, and be able and willing to give a helping hand at anything that calls for their help. The barn framed by Mr. John Whitten. —COM.

FATAL ACCIDENT.—The town was startled by a report that Mrs. Haley, mother of Mrs. John Shewell, of this Town, and who lives near Holstein, had been killed on the Railway near the village. She was struck by a flat car of one of the ballast trains and died shortly after being struck.—Review

DURING the storm on Monday evening, a considerable portion of the wall on the second story of Mr. William Robertson's new brick residence was blown down. The damage amounts to the loss of material and the time required to replace the wall.—Free Press.

RUNAWAYS.—A serious runaway occurred in Glenelg on Thursday morning last. Two ladies were driving when the horse ran away smashing the buggy and throwing the occupants out. Dr. Jameson was sent for to attend to the injuries of one of them, Miss Flora McDonald, whose injuries were of a serious nature. On Sabbath last a young man named Robert Henry was seriously injured near Dromore, Egremont, by a runaway.—Review.

On Sunday afternoon about four o'clock, the woodshed adjoining the house of Mr. Alfred Parker, who lives behind the railway station, was discovered to be on fire No one being at home at the time, the fire gained such headway that nothing could be done towards saving the house, which was burned to the ground. But with the assistance of some of the neighbors, and some persons from town who hastened to the scene, most of the furniture in the lower part of the house was saved, but a lot of things which were in the upper storey was destroyed, the fire spreading so quickly that nothing could be done toward getting them out,—Monitor.

A BEAR.—A large bear has been in the neighborhood of Scone. A man named Scheldroth was chased by it lately and was fortunately saved from harm by the assistance of his son. Mr. Lester of Elmwood met it on the road one day last week, and having procured assistance started in pursuit of his bear ship, but it escaped in the bush.—Post.

A PANIC IN DUNDALK.—Mr. D. Davidson, who has been carrying on an extensive business in Dundalk for a number of years, as general store keeper has wound up his business very suddenly, and placed his accounts in a lawyer's hands for collection. Several hundred of these accounts were rendered a few days since, with a demand for payment at once—rich and poor are served alike. It being the season of the year when money being scarce among farmers, and no mercy shown on the part of Mr. D., the people are panic stricken. Mr. D., himself, resides in Toronto—just about as safe at this time we would judge. It is not his circumstances that drives him to such harsh measures for he is wealthy.

The liver is the grand purifying ogan of the system; when inactive or obstructed bad blood and ill health arre crtain results. Burdock blood Bitters cure all diseases arising from disordered Liver, Stomach, Bowels or Kidneys, purifying, restoring and strengthening. It regulates the Bowels, cleanses and enriches the Blood, and imparts tone to evere yrgan of the body. Trial Bottles 10 Cents.

WE learn from the Advance that a melancholy accident took place in Flesherton on Saturday, 11th inst. We immediately sent our reporter to ascertain the facts, and learned that a smart young dorg ran over a man—no, that's not it; we mean a smart young man ran over a sulky riding on a dorg. No; we have not got it right yet. A dorg was run over by a smart young man, now we have it. Below we give a sketch of the accident,

DON'T fail to see the Thumb and Finger Barley Fork before making your purchase and we know you will buy no other. To be had from any of our local dealers.

Do not drug the system with nauseous purgatives that only debilitate. Burdock Blood Bitters is natures own Cachartic, it acts at once upon the Bowels, the Skin, the Liver and the Kidneys, arousing all the secretions to a healthy action. It purifies the Blood and cures all Humors, even the worst form of Scrofula, and tones up the Nervous and Debilitated.

ATTEMPTED SUICIDE.—On Friday last, a young woman who gave her name as Mrs. Brown, and her residence New York, arrived at Niagara Falls by the New York Central railway, and registered at one of the hotels. After breakfast she sauntered out and viewed various points of interest. About 2 p. m. she found herself on Luna Island, near the brink of the Falls, and threw her parasol into the water, which was quickly swept over the great cataract. At this juncure her strange motions were noticed by Mr. Furloug, a carriage driver, and Mr. Perry, a commercial traveler. They hastened to the spot and grasped her just as she was gathering her skirts around her to make a plung into the water. She was at once conveyed to the Spencer House, and a decetive was engaged to keep track of her movements. He showed her a telegram he was about to send to the chief of police, New York, fully describing her, she relaxed, and then told the wife of the clerk of the hotel that she had been brought up in the Ursuline Convent and married her guardian, with whom she had trouble about some property. She is at present under strick survillance.—Hamilton Spectator.

Reader have you tried every known remedy for Chronic disease, Impure Blood, disordered Liver or Kidneys, Nervous and General Debility, Constipation of the Bowels, with the manifold sufferings pertaining thereto? Have you given up in despair? Try Burdock Blood Bitters; it will not fail you. A Trial Bottle only costs 10 Cents. Regular size $1.00. Any dealer in medicine can supply you.

A WARNING.—There is a class of people who, when they pay their fare, suppose while on board a steamer they can act as they please without regard to the safety or comfort of others. The recent calamity at London has had no effect upon them, but it has on the steamboat captains of this port, and they seem determined to enforce their authority. Capt. Turner, of the Luella, has made the first move in the matter, and yesterday charged a young man named Robert Moffatt with a breach of the Marine Act. On the fourth of June last Moffatt and a companion were on the upper deck of the steamer, and both were requested to go below by the captain. The first refused, and was thrown down the stairway, but Moffatt interfered, saying that their were not men enough in the crew to put him down. It only took about one minute for him to find out his mistake, but in the meantime his struggles created quite a panic among the lady passengers and children on board. On hearing the evidence the Magistrate informed Moffatt that he was liable to be fined $100, but as this was the first case he would only inflict a fine of $5 and costs or 30 days. In any other case that might come before him, however, he would make it heavier. Captain Turner deserves credit for following the matter up after his unruly passenger had been ejected.—Mail.

120 pairs womans fine button shoes at W. J. McFarland's, worth $2,50 selling for $1,50 per pair, a real bargain.

THE picnic held yesterday at the Irish Lake was in every respect a success. The weather was cloudy and cool. Over 800 persons were on the ground. The dinner which cost only 10, cents, was more like a fifty cent one, comprising an abundance of the best the country could afford, and the cooking reflected great credit on the ladies.—The music, by Allan Park and brother—violin and fife—was excellent, and the young people enjoyed themselves to the full in tripping the light fantastic toe. The prizes for athletic sports were as follows:—Standing jump—1st, James McDougall, Markdale; 2nd, John Gillespie. Foot Race—Fred. Tanner, Markdale; 2nd, J. McDougall. Putting the Stone—1st, A. McMillan, Glenelg; 2nd, D. Kay, Markdale. Everything passed off in a most orderly and satisfactory manner. The total absence of intoxicating liquor on the grounds was a noteworthy circumstance, for which Father Cashen deserves great praise.

Farmers should remember that Rixford's Grass Scythes, are the only reliable article of the kind now made. Each one fully warranted, Haskett Bros. have them. Call and get one and don't you forget it.

ACCIDENT.—Mrs. D. McLeod Sr., accidently fell into the cellar yesterday breaking some ribs and receiving other injuries, but we hope not serious.

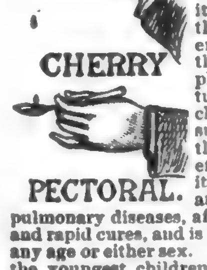
THE BEST REMEDY

FOR

Diseases of the Throat and Lungs.

AYER'S



CHERRY PECTORAL.

In diseases of the pulmonary organs a safe and reliable remedy is invaluable. AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL is such a remedy, and no other so eminently merits the confidence of the public. It is a scientific combination of the medicinal principles and curative virtues of the finest drugs, chemically united, of such power as to insure the greatest possible efficiency and uniformity of results. It strikes at the foundation of all pulmonary diseases, affording prompt relief and rapid cures, and is adapted to patients of any age or either sex. Being very palatable, the youngest children take it readily. In ordinary Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Influenza, Clergyman's Sore Throat, Asthma, Croup, and Catarrh, the effects of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL are magical, and multitudes are annually preserved from serious illness by its timely and faithful use. It should be kept at hand in every household for the protection it affords in sudden attacks. In Whooping-cough and Consumption there is no other remedy so efficacious, soothing, and helpful.

Low prices are inducements to try some of the many mixtures, or syrups, made of cheap and ineffective ingredients, now offered, which, as they contain no curative qualities, can afford only temporary relief, and are sure to deceive and disappoint the patient. Diseases of the throat and lungs demand active and effective treatment; and it is dangerous experimenting with unknown and cheap medicines, from the great liability that these diseases may, while so trifled with, become deeply seated or incurable. Use AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, and you may confidently expect the best results. It is a standard medical preparation, of known and acknowledged curative power, and is as cheap as its careful preparation and fine ingredients will allow. Eminent physicians, knowing its composition, prescribe it in their practice. The test of half a century has proven its absolute certainty to cure all pulmonary complaints not already beyond the reach of human aid.

TWO THIEVES PLAY THE BUGGY TRICK ON A CITY BANKER.

CAUGHT AND FORCED TO DISGORGE.

A daring attempt was made at noon yesterday to rob the banking office of Messrs. Kerr & MacKellar, north-west cornes of Scott and Front street. Mr. MacKellar had gone to lunch, leaving his partner alone in the office. A man entered, and approached Mr. Kerr, said that a gentleman seated behind a restive horse wished to see him on business outside. He followed the man outside and saw a middle-aged person in a buggy. The latter said that he had an extensive business connection in Germany, and wanted to know if Mr. Kerr could in that country. The banker answered the question, when the man in the buggy commenced a long, rambling conversation on the system of Canadian banking. The ignorance he displayed on the subject, and the forced attempt to prolong the conversation, excited the suspicion of Mr. Kerr. That gentleman stepped towards his office door, remarking to the man who had extensive business connections in Germany, that if he desired further information he would have to call without a buggy. When Mr. Kerr appeared at the door, he saw a neatly-dressed young man ascending the stairs leading from the office to the street In an instant the whole scheme which had been laid to trap him flashed through his mind. The neat appearance of the young man, however, nearely proved his salvation, as Mr. Kerr was loth to stop and openly accused him of robbery. "Better be sure than sorry," said the banker, as he afterwards related his adventure. The young man was stopped, and asked to re-enter the office. He enquired the reason when he was directly charged with

NEGOTIATE SOME BILLS FOR HIM

HAVING ROBBED THE OFFICE.

He became very indigiant at the accusation, and declined to do as requested. Mr. Kerr, however, was not so easily put off, and taking hold of the young man forced him into the office. Pressing him agains the counter, the young man was asked to give up every cent he had taken. He denied he had taken any money, but on being thoroughly shaken and threatened with further violence, he put his hand into his pocket and pulled out about $500 and placed it on the counter. Mr. Kerr retained his hold on the man, who made several attempts to escape. As soon as the man in the buggy noticed the scuffle going on, he drove rapidly west on Front street. The banker held on to the theif for about ten minutes, in hopes that a policeman would pass. He asked a boy to call the manager of the Dominion Telegraph Company, but that gentleman was absent from his office. Mr. Kerr also attempted to telephone for a detective, but was unsuccessful. After keeping the thief pinned up against the counter for the space of time mentioned without anyone coming to his assistance, Mr. Kerr released him, and administering a couple of well-directed kicks allowed him to depart. He lost no time in getting out of sight.

HOW IT WAS WORKED.

Mr. Kerr is of the opinion that the thief was concealed around the corner at the entrance on Front street, and as soon as he saw him leave the office to go to the man in the buggy he dodged down stairs. The till was reached by passing around the counter at an opening on the east side. All the boxes had been relieved of their contents, and if the conversation on the street had been continued for three seconds longer, the thief would have got away with the booty. The interception by Mr. Kerr was a lucky one for himself and partner. Both gentleman complain of the continued absence of the police in the localily mentioned. Had he received assistance the daring thief would now have been in the police station. In inspecting the premises, previous to the attempt made, the man in the buggy and the thief had called several times to get American notes changed into Canadian money. A description of the men was given to the detectives, but up to a late hour last night their arrest had not been effected.—Mail.

A STRANGE CUSTOM.

DANCING AND REJOICING OVER THE DEATH OF A CHILD.

Wakes in some portions of Ireland, and dances over the dead in Mexico, are common, but in the part of the civilized world people frown down upon the custom as only fit to be practiced by barbarians. Still, there was in this city last evening at the residence of Francisco Ramos, a Mexican on Losoyo street, adjoining San Antoine ice street. A child eight months of age died yesterday morning, and the parents did not weep, but rejoiced over the loss. They loved their little one, yet rejoiced because it was taken away in its purity of infancy to join the angle host up yonder. They were glad they had been thus made instrumental in adding another chorister to the hosts singing hosannahs on high. So they determined to demonstrate their rejoicing to the world by inviting friends and relatives about them, and having a dance—a wake, as the world regard such demonstrations. An Express representative chanced around the place about 9 o'clock p. m., found the house brilliantly lighted and quite a number of persons present. A harper seated in front of the enterance door, was playing a family waltz, and three or four couples were dancing to the music. Under the gallery shed, and just behind the harper, lay the dead infant, a pretty little girl. She was dressed in black, and had been placed upon a box that was covered with a white cloth, trimmed with red about the borders. The hands of the infant were nicely folded, and within was placed a bouquet of artifical flowers of crimson hue. Resting loosely about the head of the deceased was a coronet of white artifical flowers, and a similar wreath encircled the lifeless frame, while roses, pinks and several kinds of wild flowers were strewn promiscuously about the remains The little departed one was actually nestled in a bed of natural and artifical flowers and wreaths of vines. Quite a number of ladies and gentlemen who passed that way were invited within by the father and admired the pretty little infant, but looked with strange thoughts upon the scene in the adjacent room, were rejoicing took the place of those common expressions and demonstrations of grief that are manifested where the loved ones of the family circle are taken away to be here no more forever. This was the first scene of the kind the reporter ever witnessed in this city.—San Antonio, Express.

You will find everything that I sell just as I represent it, and as good value as you can possibly get for your money anywhere, as I have always held that honorable dealing is the only true course for a business man.

My Groceries are all bought for strictly nett cash, consequently I can and will sell at

A MOTHER'S PRAYER.

BY THEODORE TILTON.

With eager arms a mother pressed
A laughing babe against her breast;
Then thus to Heaven she cried in prayer;
"Now, even as his face is fair,
Oh, Lord, keep thou his soul within
As free from every spot of sin."
From Heaven the Lord an answer made;
"Behold, I grant as thou has prayed,"
Within the door the darkness crept,
And babe and mother gently slept,
From belfries rang the midnight bell,
The watchmen answered: "All is well,"
The mother at the cradle's side
Awoke to find the babe had died.
With grief to set a woman wild
She caught and grasped the marble child,
Until her heart against his own
Was broken—beaten stone.
'Oh God!" she cried in her despair,
"Why hast thou mocked a mother's prayer?"
Then answered He: "As I have willed,
Thy prayer, oh woman, is fulfilled;
If on earth thy child remain,
His soul shall gather many a stain;
At thy behest I stretched my hand
And take him to the heavenly land."
The mother heard and bowed her head
And laid her cheek against the dead,
And cried; "Oh God! I dare not pray,
Thou answerest in so strange a way."
In shadow of a taper's light
She moaned throughout all the lonely night,
But when the morning brought the sun
She prayed: "Thy will, oh Lord! be done."

COUNTY COUNCIL.

From the Owen Sound Times.

THE County Council met on Monday evening last. Dr Christoe, Warden, in the chair. The Warden addressed the Council as followe:—

GENTLEMEN OF THE COUNCIL,—Were it not for the pronounced opinion of last session in favor of a written address, I should have felt it my duty now to have omitted it, believing as I do, that it is necessarily a document of very little importance, inasmuch as the subject matter of those addresses appear in a more practical form before the standing committees, and their opinions often collide with those expressed by committee on Warden's address.

I congratulate you, gentleman, on the favorable circumstances under which we meet. As agriculturist you will deplore with me the cold wave that did so much harm, yet the recent rains have so invigorated the crops that there are fair prospects of a tolerably prosperous harvest.

Since our last meeting, your committee appointed in the interests of the township of Melancthon and Shelburne, to adjust all matters of finance consequent upon the formation of the county of Dufferin, met first in the village of Flesherton and afterwards in the village of Shelburne; and it is pleasing to know that the meetings were harmonious and the settlements just—awaiting only the ratification of the several corporations interested. The reports in due time will be read and laid before the committee of Finance and Assessment.

The accumulated interest on By-law 174, or the T. G. & B. R. By law, will no doubt interest gentlemen representing the group, and with the assistance of the Council will determine whether there shall be an annual distribution of this interest or not. The question of leasing the T. G. & B. R. is a subject engrossing the public mind and is fraught with considerable importance to the municipalities interested—even the late Grand Jury failed not to express an opinion on the subject. It will not be forgoten that a large deputation waited on the Government of Ontario a short time ago, to impress them that it was their duty to exercise their prerogative, a power invested in them by an Act of the last Provincial Parliament, against an arrangement with the Northern and Hamilton & Northwestern Railways. Such it was alleged, and as I believe, would be inimical to the interests of this county, the road itself, and especially to Owen Sound. An expression of opinion by so many representative men of this county would be of no little importance towards a just decision.

In examining the printed minutes and Auditors' report, their get up is exceptionally good; and I am sure the report shows studious care. The accounts are so simplified that the most simple cannot be excused if he fail to comprehend them. The sums granted for those labors have been well earned—but I regret that this picture has been marred by the lateness of their publication.

For the benefit of the members of this Council who do not know—myself included—it would be well to understand by what authority those large sums of money are paid under the head of "Board of Examiners," "July Examinations," and "December Examinations." It seems so anomalous that any person or persons should have power to draw from our Treasury, unless so empowered by by either the statate or authority from this Council. Under either case, it must, I think, appear resonable that before paid these accounts should pass the scrutiny of the committees of the Council, who are the custodians of the peopl's money. If it be customary so to do, merely, it must be bad. having drawn your attention to it, I am sure you will give the matter your consideration.

The equalization of assessments at this session will require your careful attention.

In conclusion I have only to add, that as usual, I trust our deliberations will be characterized by the greatest harmony; and I shall not delay in placing papers before you promptly.

I am, yours,
W. S. CHRISTOE, Warden.

The Council tuen ballotted for a committee on the Warden' address, when the following gentlemen were selected: Messrs. McNichol, Murdoch, Myles, Sing and McRae.

After some unimportant business, the Council adjourned till Tuesday at 3 p. m.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON.

The Warden presented a statement of the Government apportionment for Public Schools in the various townships, which was referred to the Education Committee; also, a number of accounts, and a communication from J. C. Spragge, Auditor, with reference to increase of salary, which were referred to the finance committee.

Mr Stark presented a petition from the ratepayers of Sullivan with reference to the boundaries of school sections. It was referred to Education Committee.

Messrs. Inglis, McKnight, Rutherford and Dobie adressed the Council on behalf of the High School, asking further aid. The facts briefly set forth were that the county of Grey gives less to its High School than any of the surrounding counties—that the annual expenses of the school are $4,500, of which the Government only grants $950, and the county $950, leaving $2,600, to be made up by the town, in addition to paying its share of the county grant. This is irrespective of the amount spent on capital account—The fine buildings they had erected having cost the town about $20,000, the interest on which would be $1,200 annually, making a total annual contribution to the High School by Owen Sound of $3,600, as against the $950 which the county contributed, while fully one-half the pupils were from the country outside the town. It was also set forth that the ratepayers of the town had resolved to keep the school free to all—it being now the only High School in the neighborhood which did not impose a tax on those attending—that efforts were being put forth to make the school second to none in the Province, and one of which the county might feel proud; but it involved a very heavy burden on the town, and unless they got further assistance from the county, the Trustees might not be able to carry out all the improvements they contemplated. What was asked, that instead of making a spasmodic grant, the county should increase the annual grant it now gave, say by 50 per cent., or an increase of $500. The county now only gave the minimum it was compelled by law to give, while other counties treated their High Schools much more liberally.

Moved by Mr. Kennedy, seconded by Mr. Malcom, That having heard the request of the High School Board for an increased annual grant, the Education Committee be requested to take the matter into consideration, and report at this session.—Carried.

The Council then adjourned till Wednesday at 10 a. m.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

The Warden made a statement with reference to the finances of the East Grey Agricultural Society. A statement was read from the County Treasurer that he had invested certain sinking funds in debentures of loan societies at 4½ per cent. Letter from Gaol Physician, with reference to salary. Petition from school section in Holland.

The Warden also presented the report of special committee on the settlement with Melancthon and Shelburne. The report was adopted.

Mr. McKechine presented report of Finance Committee. It recommended a grant of 25c. per man per day to 31st Battalion while engaged in drill, and passed a number of accounts.

A petition was presented from residents of Keppel, asking for a grant of $100 for county line between Hepworth and Wiarton.

The Council went into committee on the Finance report, Mr. Stark in the chair. On the clause respecting the volunteers, Mr. Murdoch that it be struck out. Mr. Middleton moved in amendment that the amonnt be reduced to 10c. per day. Messrs. McIntyre, Kœnig, Sing and the Warden spoke against the grant, and Messrs. McGirr, McRae, McColman, Middleton and Kennedy in favor of it. Mr. Murdoch's, motion was carried. The remaining clauses of the report were passed and the committee rose.

On the motion for the adoption of the report, Mr. McColman moved to refer it back to insert the clause respecting the volunteers. The amendment was lost on the following vote.

Yeas—Wright, McColman, Campbell, Kerr, Stark, McRae, Hall, Howey, Cameron, McGirr, Sparrow, Vasey, Read, Fox, Kennedy, Malcom, McKechnie—17.

Nays—McNicol, McCallum, J. Messenger, Myles, Boyd, Murdoch, Lawrence, Totten, Clark, Kœnig, Blyth, Winkler, Middleton, Abbot, Sing, Long, Donald, McNaught, McIntyre—19.

The report was then adopted.

Mr. Myles presented report of special committee on the Warden's address.

After some preliminary discussion on the railway clause, The Council went into committee of the whole, Mr. Clark in the chair.

The clause with refereuce to the railway re-echoed the Warden's sentiments that the proposed leasing of the T. G. & B. R. to the Northern Railway would be fraught with evil to the interests of the Municipalities which have contributed to the construction of the road, but recommended leaving the matter in the hands of the Executive, as they felt confident their prerogative would be exercised justly.

On that clause coming up, Mr. Middleton, seconded by Mr. Lang, moved an amendment as follows.

That clause No. 5 be amended by striking out all the words after "who have contributed to the construction of the road," and the following substituted: Would recommend that a strongly worded memorial be drafted signed by the Warden and countersigned by the Clerk, and having the corporate seal attached, for immediate presentation to the Lieutenant Governor in Council, praying that any arrangement having in view the working of the T. G. & B. R. by the Northern and Northwestern Railway Companies be not ratified, as such would be prejudicial to the interests of a large preponderance of the population, territory and wealth of this county, and contrary to the wishes and best interests of the whole of the municipalities which have contributed by way of bonus to the construction of the said T. G. & B. R.

The amendment was adopted by an overwhelming majority.

On the clause which stated that the Board of Examiners had a right to draw their pay without submitting accounts to the Council, the Warden moved to have the opinion of the County Solicitor on the point.

The report recommended that the equalization of assessments be made on the basis of the report of the County Valuators.

The committee rose, and the Council adjourned till 7 p. m.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

Mr. McRae gave notice that he would move to dispense with the December session.

A communiction was presented from Mr. Miller, asking an increase of salary as Court House keeper.

The report of committee on Warden's address was adopted.

Mr. Sing presented the report of committee on County Property, which was adopted.

Mr. McKechine presented report of Education Committee, which recommended amongst other things, that the Council memorialize the Government for the disendowment of Upper Canada College. On motion of Mr. Murdoch, the report was adopted.

Council adjourned till Thursday at 2 p. m.

NERVE.

"What constitutes nerve?" asked the New York World the other day of its readers. One man will answer that it is presence of mind; another will say that it is pluck; another that it is being cool and collected in an emergency. It is none of these. It is something back of all of them, and something which a man never had unless it was born in him. Instances of presence of mind are met with every day in the army.

An officer out in charge of foragers or on a reconnoissance would be suddenly attacked. Presence of mind would aid him to form his men for defence. He had that presence of mind, even though his face was as white as flour and his chin shaking. Brave men are common enough in the ranks. Call for men to face certain death and a hundred privates would step out at once, yet test their "nerve" and they have none.

Among two or three cases in mind, that of John Melrose, a trooper in the 6th Michigan Cavalry, is recalled. He was an undersized, quiet spoken man, and he had that wonderful nerve which not three men in the whole brigade possessed. While acting as a scout in the Shenandoah Valley he was one day eating his dinner in a farmhouse, when in walked seven Confederate soldiers. They knew him for a Union scout, and he knew them for Confederates. A brave man would have made a rush or had a fight. Melrose simply looked up and as they filed in smiled over his fix, and spoke out:

"Say, old woman, put on more dinner, here, and we'll have a good square meal together!"

"You are my prisoner," said the sergeant of the squad, as he advanced.

"Yes, I know it, but I'll pay for a dinner for you and your men just the same! Sit right down and make yourselves at home."

His nerve upset the soldiers, and after a moment they took seats at the table, forming a complete circle around the board. As soon as they began to eat he began to think of escape. It was summer, and the window behind him and ten feet away was open. If he stood up, all eyes would be upon him, and any excuse to leave the room could not be thought of.

The meal was about half finished, and the captors and captive were chatting away, when Melrose suddenly flung himself backward, upset his chair, and bounded through the window. The soldiers ran out and fired at and pursued him, but he made good his escape.

In the Luray Valley, just before the affair known as the Woodstock Races, Melrose and his companion fell out of ranks to forage. After securing a supply of meat they pushed on after the column, and were riding at a gallop when five bushwhackers, well-mounted, came out of the cross-road about twenty rods ahead of them.

"We are dead men!" said the scout's companion, as they came to a halt.

Looking back they saw four more bushwhackers climbing the fence to take position on the highway. Melrose calmly viewing their situation, said:

We will charge them! Fall in behind me and there will be less danger. Draw your sabre and strike hard!"

The other dared not try it, though he was a brave man. He, therefore, kept his place as the scout dashed forward. Melrose rode straight at the men with drawn sabre, and the volley they fired went over him. He struck the line, sabred a man as he passed, and rejoined the column. His companion was never heard of again, probably being murdered in cold blood.

In 1864 Melrose and three other foragers were captured in the Shenandoah Valley, taken to a small encampment, and the four placed in a log house under guard until their cases could be disposed of. They talked the situation over, and the bravest of 'em could see no hope of escape. Melrose quietly listened to their discouraging remarks, and as quietly replied that he would be inside the Union lines before midnight. There was a circle of sentinels around the building, which had but one door. The sentinels paced within six paces of the building, and the one in front could see the prisoners through the doorway. Melrose said that if all would rush together, the sentinels would be confused and either hold their fire or fire wild. The three men had participated in more than twenty battles, and were known as brave fellows, but here they wanted nerve, and nerve was what they hadn't got.

"Very well, then, I will go alone," was the quiet announcement, and as night came on Melrose was ready. Standing in the doorway he asked the sentinel what time it was.

"You git back thar, or I'll shoot," was the prompt reply.

"Yes, I'm going right back," said the scout as he dashed on the man, hit him a stunning blow, and made for the woods. He had to run across an open field in full view of the camp and, though it was dusk, he could be seen plainly for quite half the distance. More than fifty shots were fired at him, and then pursuit began, but he reached the woods and made his escape.

He was one day scouting up the valley, having on a mixed uniform, when he suddenly came upon two ferocious looking guerillias while crossing a thick wood. They were seated on a log, backs to him; but at the sound of his step they sprang up and covered him with their carbines. It would have been bold to bolt, and take the chances of being hit. Melrose never slackened his pace or changed his countenance, but walked directly up to the men and quietly said:

"I've got news for the colonel, and I want you both to go along and show me the way."

"Who said so?" quickly asked one of the men.

"If I miss the way there'll be an awful row, for this is important news," he answered.

"Who be you?"

"Come along and ask the colonel."

"Well, you can't ... up there. You ... the road ... it for a mile, and when you ... old log stable on the right, turn ... blind road."

"Why can't one of you come along?"

"You can't miss the way. We're watching here for game."

Melrose then slouched off in a lazy, tired sort of manner. He had got about fifty feet when he heard them cock their guns. He did not turn his head or quicken his pace.

"He's a Yank—shoot him!" called out one of the men; but the scout walked on. They were trying him; but he had the nerve of a Napoleon, and he kept his leisurely pace until well away from their neighborhood.

TEARING UP THE BIBLE.

EXTRAORDINARY PROPOSITION OF AN ORTHODOX PROTESTANT CLERGYMAN.

(Rev. Dr. Swing in Chicago Alliance.)

It so happens that all modern difficulties of any moment, in one direction of the holy Sciptures, are not difficulties with a rendering, but with the subject matter, however interepted. There should be in the new version elimination of whole chapters and whole books, on the ground that they make the sacred volume too large to be printed in good type and still be portable. A small Bible always means that the type is almost microscopic. A popular Bible should be at once portable and of fair, clear type, and to make this possible a large part of the old testament should be omitted from the editions of the future.

Not only are the laws of the Mosaic state repealed and dead, and therefore unworthy of a place in this guide of the public, but they are the laws of a semi-barbarous age, and cast no little of their imperfection over upon the fair pages of the new testament. The new testament has suffered much from thus being found in bad company. Those treaties are valuable as being a part of the history of the Jewish state, but not as being a part, much less valuable part of Christianity. Many of the Hebrew laws were so unjust that their presence in the popular Bible makes it essential that each clergyman and each Sunday school teacher shall spend much time in explaining the relation of Mosaic things to Christain affairs—an explanation to be made easier by a withdrawal of the cause. The laws about women and slaves are particularly unjust, and their presence in the good book will always complicate the injury: "What is inspiration?" If, almost all Christain scholars admit, those laws were the temporary suatutes of a nation, temporary compromises between a horrid epoch and a kinder one in comparison, that legal literature should have lapsed into quietness along with the Hebrew, the Amorite, and Jebusite, and not be spread out to-day before our youth, as forming some part of the divine truths to be believed. Besides the savage injustice in some of those laws there is much that offends against refinement of our more civilized times. No minister, no family, dares read aloud all of the old testiment. It came from a far off time, and jars like a discord upon the modern heart. The Bible has already been so deeply injured by the timidy of its friends that now, since the rage for a new version has come, it is high time a demand was made that the best of all books be set free from some of the weights which so impede its progress.

Other leaders will come along after a time to make changes of a more radical nature, and from their hands the Bible will come ready to be the hand book of the Christians of the next century. The bible will always live and always lead men.

RUNAWAY ACCIDENT.—We regret to learn that a severe accident happened to Mr. Wm. Branigan, Normanby, when returning from Church here, with his family, on Sabbath last. When approaching his own place the tongue dropped out of the carriage and the horses ran away, overturning the vehicle and throwing out the occupants, Mr. Branigan falling under. When extricated he was found to be seriously injured; but we are glad to learn that he is getting along favourably. The others escaped with slight injury.—Post.

When Squashes and melons first break ground, give them a dusting of compost, made of equal parts of sifted unbleached wood ashes and gypsum or land plaster. This will protect the young plant from the "striped bug," and its use may be continned with advantage until the vines get so strong as not to care for the enemy. As a top dress to any garden crop, it will be found beneficial.

The liver is the grand purifying organ of the system; when inactive or obstructed bad blood and ill health arre certain results. Burdock blood Bitters cure all diseases arising from disordered Liver, Stomach, Bowels or Kidneys, purifying, restoring and strengthening. It regulates the Bowels, cleanses and enriches the Blood, and imparts tone to every organ of the body. Trial Bottles 10 Cents.

Tomato plants should not be grown too rapidly, and if they begin to run should be transplanted, so as to produce a stocky growth. Some gardeners take pains to put them, into pots but this is not generally done, as it is sometimes expensive and troublesome; repeated checking by transplanting induces early maturity and early fruiting.

If you are suffering with a cold do not fail to try HAGYARD'S PECTORAL BALSAM; it is daily relieving its hundreds throughout our Dominion. It is pleasant and palatable.

A MOTHER'S PRAYER.

BY THEODORE TILTON.

With eager arms a mother pressed
A laughing babe against her breast;
Then thus to Heaven she cried in prayer;
"Now, even as his face is fair,
Oh, Lord, keep thou his soul within
As free from every spot of sin."
From Heaven the Lord an answer made;
"Behold, I grant as thou has prayed,"
Within the door the darkness crept,
And babe and mother gently slept,
From belfries rang the midnight bell,
The watchmen answered: "All is well,"
The mother at the cradle's side
Awoke to find the babe had died.
With grief to set a woman wild
She caught and grasped the marble child
Until her heart against his own
Was broken—beaten stone.
'Oh God!" she cried in her despair,
"Why hast thou mocked a mother's prayer?"
Then answered He: "As I have willed,
Thy prayer, oh woman, is fulfilled;
If on earth thy child remain;
His sou lshall gather many a stain;
At thy behest I stretched my hand
And take him to the heavenly land."
The mother heard and bowed her head
And laid her cheek against the dead,
And cried; "Oh God! I dare not pray,
Thou answerest in so strange a way."
In shadow of a taper's light
She moaned throughout all the lonely night,
But when the morning brought the sun
She prayed: "Thy will, oh Lord! be done"

COUNTY COUNCIL.

From the Owen Sound Times.

THE County Council met on Monday evening last. Dr Christoe, Warden, in the chair. The Warden addressed the Council as followe:—

GENTLEMEN OF THE COUNCIL,—Were it not for the pronounced opinion of last session in favor of a written address, I should have felt it my duty now to have omitted it, believing as I do, that it is necessarily a document of very little importance, inasmuch as the subject matter of those addresses appear in a more practical form before the standing committees, and their opinions often collide with those expressed by committee on Warden's address.

I congratulate you, gentleman, on the favorable circumstances under which we meet. As agriculturist you will deplore with me the cold wave that did so much harm, yet the recent rains have so invigorated the crops that there are fair prospects of a tolerably prosperous harvest.

Since our last meeting, your committee appointed in the interests of the township of Melancthon and Shelburne, to adjust all matters of finance consequent upon the formation of the county of Dufferin, met first in the village of Flesherton and afterwards in the village of Shelburne; and it is pleasing to know that the meetings were harmonious and the settlements just—awaiting only the ratification of the several corporations interested. The reports in due time will be read and laid before the committee of Finance and Assessment.

The accumulated interest on Bylaw 174, or the T. G. & B. R. By law, will no doubt interest gentlemen representing the group, and with the assistance of the Council will determine whether there shall be an annual distribution of this interest or not. The question of leasing the T. G. & B. R. is a subject engrossing the public mind and is fraught with considerable importance to the municipalities interested—even the late Grand Jury failed not to express an opinion on the subject. It will not be forgoten that a large deputation waited on the Government of Ontario a short time ago, to impress them that it was their duty to exercise their prerogative, a power invested in them by an Act of the last Provincial Parliament, against an arrangement with the Northern and Hamilton & Northwestern Railways. Such it was alleged, and as I believe, would be inimical to the interests of this county, the road itself, and especially to Owen Sound. An expression of opinion by so many representative men of this county would be of no little importance towards a just decision.

In examining the printed minutes and Auditors' report, their get up is exceptionally good; and I am sure the report shows studious care. The accounts are so simplified that the most simple cannot be excused if he fail to comprehend them. The sums granted for those labors have been well earned—but I regret that this picture has been marred by the lateness of their publication.

For the benefit of the members of this Council who do not know—myself included—it would be well to understand by what authority those large sums of money are paid under the head of "Board of Examiners," "July Examinations," and "December Examinations." It seems so anomalous that any person or persons should have power to draw from our Treasury, unless so empowered by by either the statute or authority from this Council. Under either case, it must, I think, appear resonable that before paid these accounts should pass the scrutiny of the committees of the Council, who are the custodians of the peopl's money. If it be customary so to do, merely, it must be bad. having drawn your attention to it, I am sure you will give the matter your consideration.

The equalization of assessments at this session will require your careful attention.

In conclusion I have only to add, that as usual, I trust our deliberations will be characterized by the greatest harmony; and I shall not delay in placing papers before you promptly.

I am, yours,

W. S. CHLISTOE, Warden.

The Council tuen ballotted for a committee on the Warden' address, when the following gentlemen were selected: Messrs. McNichol, Murdoch, Myles, Sing and McRae.

After some unimportant business, the Council adjourned till Tuesday at 3 p. m.

TUESDAY AFTERNOON.

The Warden presented a statement of the Government apportionment for Public Schools in the various townships, which was referred to the Education Committee; also, a number of accounts, and a communication from J. O. Spragge, Auditor, with reference to increase of salary, which were referred to the finance committee.

Mr Stark presented a petition from the ratepayers of Sullivan with reference to the boundaries of school sections. It was referred to Education Committee.

Messrs. Inglis, McKnight, Rutherford and Dobie adressed the Council on behalf of the High School, asking further aid. The facts briefly set forth were that the county of Grey gives less to its High School than any of the surrounding counties—that the anual expenses of the school are $4,500, of which the Government only grants $950, and the county $950, leaving $2,600, to be made up by the town, in addition to paying its share of the county grant. This is irrespective of the amount spent on capital account—The fine buildings they had erected having cost the town about $20,000, the interest on which would be $1,200 annually, making a total annual contribution to the High School by Owen Sound of $3,600, as against the $950 which the county contributed, while fully one-half the pupils were from the country outside the town. It was also set forth that the ratepayers of the town had resolved to keep the school free to all—it being now the only High School in the neighborhood which did not impose a tax on those attending—that efforts were being put forth to make the school second to none in the Province, and one of which the county might feel proud; but it involved a very heavy burden on the town, and unless they got further assistance from the county, the Trustees might not be able to carry out all the improvements they contemplated. What was asked, that instead of makeing a sapsmodic grant, the county should increase the annual grant it now gave, say by 50 per cent., or an increase of $500. The county now only gave the minimum it was compelled by law to give, while other counties treated their High Schools much more liberally.

Moved by Mr. Kennedy, seconded by Mr. Malcom, That having heard the request of the High School Board for an increased annual grant, the Education Committee be requested to take the matter into consideration, and report at this session.—Carried.

The Council then adjourned till Wednesday at 10 a. m.

WEDNESDAY MORNING.

The Warden made a statement with reference to the finances of the East Grey Agricultural Society. A statement was read from the County Treasurer that he had invested certain sinking funds in debentures of loan societies at 4½ per cent. Letter from Gaol Physician, with reference to salary. Petition from school section in Holland.

The Warden also presented the report of special committee on the settlement with Melancthon and Shelburne. The report was adopted.

Mr. McKechine presented report of Finance Committee. It recommended a grant of 25c. per man per day to 31st Battalion while engaged in drill, and passed a number of accounts.

A petition was presented from residents of Keppel, asking for a grant of $100 for county line between Hepworth and Wiarton.

The Council went into committee on the Finance report, Mr. Stark in the chair. On the clause respecting the volunteers, Mr. Murdoch that it be struck out. Mr. Middleton moved in amendment that the amount be reduced to 10c. per day. Messrs. McIntyre, Kœnig, Sing and the Warden spoke against the grant, and Messrs. McGirr, McRae, McColman, Middleton and Kennedy in favor of it. Mr. Murdoch's, motion was carried. The remaining clauses of the report were passed and the committee rose.

On the motion for the adoption of the report, Mr. McColman moved to refer it back to insert the clause respecting the volunteers. The amendment was lost on the following vote.

Yeas—Wright, McColman, Campbell, Kerr, Stark, McRae, Hall, Howey, Cameron, McGirr, Sparrow, Vasey, Read, Fox, Kennedy, Malcom, McKechnie—17.

Nays—McNicol, McCallum, J. Messenger, Myles, Boyd, Murdoch, Lawrence, Totten, Clark, Kœnig, Blyth, Winkler, Middleton, Abbot, Sing, Long, Donald, McNaught, McIntyre—19.

The report was then adopted.

Mr. Myles presented report of special committee on the Warden's address.

After some preliminary discussion on the railway clause, The Council went into committee of the whole, Mr. Clark in the chair.

The clause with refereuce to the railway re-echoed the Warden's sentiments that the proposed leasing of the T. G. & B. R. to the Northern Railway would be fraught with evil to the interests of the Municipalities which have contributed to the construction of the road, but recommended leaving the matter in the hands of the Executive, as they felt confident their prerogative would be exercised justly.

On that clause coming up, Mr. Middleton, seconded by Mr. Lang, moved an amendment as follows.

That clause No. 5 be amended by striking out all the words after "who have contributed to the construction of the road," and the following substituted: Would recommend that a strongly worded memorial be drafted signed by the Warden and countersigned by the Clerk, and having the corporate seal attached, for immediate presentation to the Lieutenant Governor in Council, praying that any arrangement having in view the working of the T. G. & B. R. by the Northern and Northwestern Railway Companies be not ratified, as such would be prejudicial to the interests of a large preponderance of the population, territory and wealth of this county, and contrary to the wishes and best interests of the whole of the municipalities which have contributed by way of bonus to the construction of the said T. G. & B. R.

The amendment was adopted by an overwhelming majority.

On the clause which stated that the Board of Examiners had a right to draw their pay without submitting accounts to the Council, the Warden moved to have the opinion of the County Solicitor on the point.

The report recommended that the equalization of assessments be made on the basis of the report of the County Valuators.

The committee rose, and the Council adjourned till 7 p. m.

WEDNESDAY EVENING.

Mr. McRae gave notice that he would move to dispense with the December session.

A communiction was presented from Mr. Miller, asking an increase of salary as Court House keeper.

The report of committee on Warden's address was adopted.

Mr. Sing presented the report of committee on County Property, which was adopted.

Mr. McKechine presented report of Education Committee, which recommended amongst other things, that the Council memorialize the Government for the disendowment of Upper Canada College. On motion of Mr. Murdoch, the report was adopted.

Council adjourned till Thursday at 2 p. m.

NERVE.

"What constitutes nerve?" asked the New York World the other day of its readers. One man will answer that it is presence of mind; another will say that it is pluck; another that it is being cool and collected in an emergency. It is none of these. It is something back of all of them, and something which a man never had unless it was born in him. Instances of presence of mind are met with every day in the army.

An officer out in charge of foragers or on a reconnoissance would be suddenly attacked. Presence of mind would aid him to form his men for defence. He had that presence of mind, even though his face was as white as flour and his chin shaking. Brave men are common enough in the ranks. Call for men to face certain death and a hundred privates would step out at once, yet test their "nerve" and they have none.

Among two or three cases in mind, that of John Melrose, a trooper in the 6th Michigan Cavalry, is recalled. He was an undersized, quiet spoken man, and he had that wonderful nerve which not three men in the whole brigade possessed. While acting as a scout in the Shenandoah Valley he was one day eating his dinner in a farmhouse, when in walked seven Confederate soldiers. They knew him for a Union scout, and he knew them for Confederates. A brave man would have made a rush or had a fight. Melrose simply looked up and as they filed in smiled over his fix, and spoke out:

"Say, old woman, put on more dinner, here, and we'll have a good square meal together!"

"You are my prisoner," said the sergeant of the squad, as he advanced.

"Yes, I know it, but I'll pay for a dinner for you and your men just the same! Sit right down and make yourselves at home."

His nerve upset the soldiers, and after a moment they took seats at the table, forming a complete circle around the board. As soon as they began to eat he began to think of escape. It was summer, and the window behind him and ten feet away was open. If he stood up, all eyes would be upon him, and any excuse to leave the room could not be thought of.

The meal was about half finished, and the captors and captive were chatting away, when Melrose suddenly flung himself backward, upset his chair, and bounded through the window. The soldiers ran out and fired at and pursued him, but he made good his escape.

In the Luray Valley, just before the affair known as the Woodstock Races, Melrose and his companion fell out of ranks to forage. After securing a supply of meat they pushed on after the column, and were riding at a gallop when five bushwhackers, well-mounted, came out of the cross-road about twenty rods ahead of them.

"We are dead men!" said the scout's companion, as they came to a halt.

Looking back they saw four more bushwhackers climbing the fence to take position on the highway. Melrose calmly viewing their situation, said:

We will charge them! Fall in behind me and there will be less danger. Draw your sabre and strike hard!"

The other dared not try it, though he was a brave man. He, therefore, kept his place as the scout dashed forward. Melrose rode straight at the men with drawn sabre, and the volley they fired went over him. He struck the line, sabred a man as he passed, and rejoined the column. His companion was never heard of again, probably being murdered in cold blood.

In 1864 Melrose and three other foragers were captured in the Shenandoah Valley, taken to a small encampment, and the four placed in a log house under guard until their cases could be disposed of. They talked the situation over, and the bravest of them could see no hope of escape. Melrose quietly listened to their discouraging remarks, and as quietly replied that he would be inside the Union lines before midnight. There was a circle of sentinels around the building, which had but one door. The sentinels paced within six paces of the building, and the one in front could see the prisoners through the doorway. Melrose said that if all would rush together, the sentinels would be confused and either hold their fire or fire wild. The three men had participated in more than twenty battles, and were known as brave fellows, but here they wanted nerve, and nerve was what they hadn't got.

"Very well, then, I will go alone," was the quiet announcement, and as night came on Melrose was ready. Standing in the doorway he asked the sentinel what time it was.

"You git back thar, or I'll shoot," was the prompt reply.

"Yes, I'm going right back," said the scout as he dashed on the man, hit him a stunning blow, and made for the woods. He had to run across an open field in full view of the camp and, though it was dusk, he could be seen plainly for quite half the distance. More than fifty shots were fired at him, and then pursuit began, but he reached the woods and made his escape.

He was one day scouting up the valley, having on a mixed uniform, when he suddenly came upon two ferocious looking guerillias while crossing a thick wood. They were seated on a log, backs to him; but at the sound of his step they sprang up and covered him with their carbines. It would have been bold to bolt, and take the chances of being hit. Melrose never slackened his pace or changed his countenance, but walked directly up to the men and quietly said:

"I've got news for the colonel, and I want you both to go along and show me the way."

"Who said so?" quickly asked one of the men.

"If I miss the way there'll be an awful row, for this is important news," he answered.

"Who be you?"

"Come along and ask the colonel."

"You can't ... We're watching here for game."

Melrose then slouched off in a lazy, tired sort of manner. He had got about fifty feet when he heard them cock their guns, but he did not turn his head or quicken his pace.

"He's a Yank—shoot him!" called out one of the men; but the scout walked on. They were trying him; but, he had the nerve of a Napoleon, and he kept his leisurely pace until well away from their neighborhood.

Do not drug the system with nauseous purgatives that only debilitate. Burdock Blood Bitters is natures own Cachartic, it acts at once upon the Bowels, the Skin, the Liver, and the Kidneys, arousing all the secretions to a healthy action. It purifies the Blood and cures all Humors, even the worst form of Scrofula, and tones up the Nervous and Debilitated.

TEARING UP THE BIBLE.

EXTRAORDINARY PROPOSITION OF AN ORTHODOX PROTESTANT CLERGYMAN.

(Rev. Dr. Swing in Chicago Alliance.)

It so happens that allmodern difficulties of any moment, in one direction of the holy Scriptures, are not difficulties with a rendering, but with the subject matter, however interepted. There should be in the new version elimination of whole chapters and whole books, on the ground that they make the sacred volume too large to be printed in good type and still be portable. A small Bible always means that the type is almost microscopic. A popular Bible should be at once portable and of fair, clear type, and to make this possible a large part of the old testament should be omitted from the editions of the future.

Not only are the laws of the Mosaic state repealed and dead, and therefore unworthy of a place in this guide of the public, but they are the laws of a semi-barbarous age, and cast no little of their imperfection over upon the fair pages of the new testament. The new testament has suffered much from thus being found in bad company. Those treaties are valuable as being a part of the history of the Jewish state, but not as being a part, much less valuable part of Christianity. Many of the Hebrew laws were so unjust that their presence in the popular Bible makes it essential that each clergyman and each Sunday school teacher shall spend much time in explaining the relation of Mosaic things to Christain affairs—an explanation to be made easier by a withdrawal of the cause. The laws about women and slaves are particularly unjust, and their presence in the good book will always complicate the injury: "What is inspiration?" If, almost all Christain scholars admit, those laws were the temporary suatutes of a nation, temporary compromises between a horrid epoch and a kinder one in comparison, that legal literature should have lapsed into quietness along with the Hebrew, the Amonite, and Jebusite, and not be spread out to-day before our youth, as forming some part of the divine truths to be believed. Besides the savage injustice in some of those laws there is much that offends against refinement of our more civilized times. No minister, no family, dares read aloud all of the old testiment. It came from a far off time, and jars like a discord upon the modern heart. The Bible has already been so deeply injured by the timidy of its friends that now, since the rage for a new version has come, it is high time a demand was made that the best of all books be set free from some of the weights which so impede its progress.

Other leaders will come along after a time to make changes of a more radical nature, and from their hands the Bible will come ready to be the hand book of the Christians of the next century. The bible will always live and always lead men.

Reader have you tried every known remedy for Chronic disease, Impure Blood, disordered Liver or Kidneys, Nervous and General Debility, Constipation of the Bowels, with the manifold sufferings pertaining thereto? Have you given up in despair? Try Burdock Blood Bitters; it will not fail you. A Trial Bottle only costs 10 Cents, Regular size $1.00. Any dealer in medicine can supply you.

RUNAWAY ACCIDENT.—We regret to learn that a severe accident happened to Mr. Wm. Branigan, Normanby, when returning from Church here, with his family, on Sabbath last. When approaching his own place the tongue dropped out of the carriage and the horses ran away, overturning the vehicle and throwing out the occupants, Mr. Branigan falling under. When extricated he was found to be seriously injured; but we are glad to learn that he is getting along favourably. The others escaped with slight injury.—Post.

When Squashes and melons first break ground, give them a dusting of compost, made of equal parts of sifted unbleached wood ashes and gypsum or land plaster. This will protect the young plant from the "striped bug," and its use may be continned with advantage until the vines get so strong as not to care for the enemy. As a top dress to any garden crop, it will be found beneficial.

The liver is the grand purifying ogan of the system; when inactive or obstructed bad blood and ill health arre crtain results. Burdock blood Bitters cure all diseases arising from disordered Liver, Stomach, Bowels or Kidneys, purifying. restoring and strengthening. It regulates the Bowels, cleanses and enriches the Blood, and imparts tone to every organ of the body. Trial Bottles 10 Cents.

Tomato plants should not be grown too rapidly, and if they begin to run should be transplanted, so as to produce a stocky growth. Some gardeners take pains to put them, into pots but this is not generally done, as it is sometimes expensive and troublesome; repeated checking by transplanting induces early maturity and early fruiting.

If you are suffering with a cold do not fail to try HAGYARD'S PECTORAL BALSAM; it is daily relieving its hundreds throughout our Dominion. It is pleasant and palatable.

A communication signed "Cisma," and one in answer to "Old Maid," with several articles crowded out this week, will appear in our next.

WE are pleased to state that at the meeting held in Toronto, on the 28th ult., of the Directors and Shareholders of the Toronto, Grey & Bruce Railway, it was decided that the road should be leased to the Grand Trunk. There has been great rejoicing along the Line at the result, especially at Owen Sound, where the flag was run up on the Town Hall, upon reception of the news, and a torchlight procession in the evening.

ASTRONOMICAL.—The conjunction of planets which many of our contemporaries have been for some time past predicting for the morning of Sunday, June 19th, was unfortunately not visible in this city on account of cloudy weather. Monday morning at the hour predicted the sky was again unfavourable. But on Tuesday at about 3 a. m. four of the plannets were to be seen in the eastern heavens, a little below the moon. The interior planets, Mercury and Venus, were shining with great brilliancy, undimmed by the approaching dawn. A little further to the south were Saturn and Mars. Venus, like our noon, presents different phases to us in its orbit around the sun. Last, night it presented an appearance exactly similar to our satellite (which is now in its last quarter), its silver bow hanging like a miniature moon in the sky. The various phases of this planet are only visible through a telescope, but one of ordinary power will quite suffice for the purpose. The diagrams which have been given in the columns of several of the papers show this conjunction as taking place in the constellation Taurus, and in the neighbourhood of that famous star, Alcyone (eta Tauri), the principal star of the Pleiades, which is now regarded as most probably the centre of the universe.. The approach of the sun, however, rendered it impossible to see either this star or any of the other planets when they rose at this season. Many people who were terrified by the predictions of evil consequent on a conjunction of the planets, or who erroneously think that the symbolism of the great pyramid points to the speedy end of the world, will be interested to know that the Rev. H. Grattan Guinness, in his well-known work, "The Approaching end of the Age," gives the year A. D. 1919 as the approximate date for the close of the present dispensation, after which comes the millennium. The only calamity which has befallen the earth which can be directly traced to the baneful influence of the heavenly bodies is, perhaps, the recent fire in Quebec.—Mail.

BURGLARY.—The store of Wm. Hogg was burglarized on Friday night, and the cash box, containing some $65, was carried off; entrance was made from the cellar. There is no doubt that the thieves were well acquainted with the premises. The empty cash box was found a short distance from the store. All we can say at present is, that we hope the thieves will be discovered, and a rimming full measure of justice meted out to them.

The plentiful rain has revived a good deal of crop, which was damaged by the frost, and hopes are entertained, that with good harvest weather, things may not be so bad as was anticipated. The hay crop will, beyond a doubt, be very light; not more than half a crop at best.

The little enterprise that is left in Eugenia is no doubt exerting itself, but why don't the people offer a bonus to some enterprising manufacturer. There is ample room, unequalled water power, or is it decreed they shall lay idle forever. We confess our expectations, which were at par some 15 of 16 years ago, can now be discounted; yes, getting far below zero.

Statute labor is now the order of the day, all vieing with each other to see who will tire first at leaning their chins on the shovel handle.

SOMETHING UNUSUAL.—Two of our Villagers and friend Tom met to take a cup o' kindness, but "Old Tom" got master of the situtation and after considerable wrestling, put the whole three down.

It is said the volunteers were very sober and orderly while at Niagara, onlyone getting the worse of liquor during their stay there. When he came home, we had him chastized and rubbed down with a brick-bat.

There has been more drunken men seen in our streets the past two weeks than usual. The whiskey must either be stronger or the men have become more thirsty since the road improvements.

Mr. Richardson, is raising up his old Warehouse, and is going to veneer it with brick, and finish it off into shops to rent.

Something wanted here is another Hotel. There is a splendid opening for one. I do not mean a grog shop, but a first class house. Will not some other village divide with us.

I will write "Old Maid" a letter after a while, if the letter she gets does not suit her.

Mr. W. Bradley has purchased a large quantity of No. 1 Fall, and White Russian Wheat, and is turning out a splendid class of flour.

FRIENDS—I propose holding a public examination of the pupils in my school on Thursday, July 7th, beginning at 1 o'clock p. m. After the causality and comparison of the pupils have been tested, alimentiveness will be exercised, when each one present will be called upon to participate of the good things which shall be provided by the young ladies of the school. You are respectfully solicited to attend. Come along fathers and mothers and witness the proficiency of your children while under my supervision; encourage us by your presence in the noble work we are engaged; let your children see that you are more than interested in this the department of their training. If you cannot come during the exercises of the examination, come to our festival, which will take place about 4 o'clock p. m.—Come along and let us have a pleasant time together, and encourage the young people in their labors.

Your humble servant,

Statute labor, is the order of the day.

Crops are looking well since the rain.

Mr. Wm. Nelson will open out a general store next week.

A big time expected on the 12th.—Several Lodges will spend the day here.

BELLEVILLE, June 22.—The following are the particulars of the killing of a hunter by a bear, in the township of Carlow: The famous old hunter and trapper, Dennison, of the Bog Opeongo lake, and formerly of Dennison's bridge, on the Madawaska, having set a trap for a bear, went to examine it in company with a little boy. It appears that the bear had got caught, but had broken the chain to which the trap was attached, and came upon them quite unexpectedly, and the old hunter tripping over a log was immediately seized by the bear, when a struggle for life and death commenced. Dennison called to the boy to run to the canoe to save himself, which he did. The little fellow, who was only eight years old, paddled the canoe a distance of nine miles to the nearest settlers, who returned with him and found the lifeless remains of Dennison sadly mutilated, an arm, a leg and other bones being broken, They succeeded in killing the bear and returned with the body.

HYMENIAL.—On Tuesday evening, a few of the village friends of the newly married Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Miller gave them an agreeable surprise, by calling upon them and presenting Mrs. Miller with a very handsome China Tea Set. The visitors were treated to a very substantial l[illegible]n, after which a couple of hours were merrily spent in hilarious games. The intruders then departed, all expressing happiest wishes for the wellfare of the joyful pair. Such episodes tend materially to smooth the path of life's rough way.

Correspondence.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood, that we do not hold ourselves reponsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

DEAR SIR,—In this age of change it is not at all surprising to find man's ingenuity at work on things sacred as well as secular.

Any one acquainted with the government and worship of the Apostolic Church, must, on reflection, be deeply impressed with the awful difference between it and our every day practice now-a days. Indeed our way of doing things now differs very much from the way in which we sought to accomplish the same ends twenty years ago.

If funds are wanted for Sabbath School or Church purposes, Tea meetings, socials, Festivals, or some such entertainments, are at once resorted to, and these have been carried out lately with so much zeal that it would seem we are practically pandering to the sensuous that we may be able to support the spiritual. Being convinced that our present system in these matters has a strong tendency to lower the spirituality of our ecclesiastical institutions, I venture to send you these few lines. My object is not to find fault with any sect or church, but rather to show where I think we are all in error, and try if possible to turn the attention of the leading members in our various churches to adopt other means for the support of Gospel ordinances. It is admitted on all hands that a certain amount of money is needed to properly manage our ecclesiastical matters, and the question is often asked, "What is the best way to raise the necessary funds?" I admit there is a difficulty, for there are many church going people who get up their back if you ask them for a dollar, they admit that some money is required, but they will raise a thousand objections rather than try to do anything to help matters, and when at last you get some trifle it is given with such an unchristian spirit that one feels almost inclined to say—well, keep it.

In Patriarchal days a tenth of all was freely given. It is recorded that Abram gave a tenth of all to the High Priest. Jacob also freely offers a tenth of all to God.

Under the Mosaic Law a tenth was commanded to be given for sacred purposes, and you will please observe that it was to be a tenth of all "whether of the seed of the land, or of the fruit of the tree, it is the Lord's." And concerning the Tithe of the Herd, or of the Flock, whatsoever passeth under the rod the tenth shall be holy unto the Lord, besides the Lord was to get the first, and not the dregs, nor gleanings, nor only a tenth after every other claim was paid. By the Prophet Malachi we learn that the Jews were charged by God with robbery when they witheld the tithes.

Under the "new and better covenant" it is different. There are no direct commands from the great lawgiver, we are left in this as in many other things, to the "freedom of our own will." Still our duty is clear. The injunction is to give as the Lord has prospered us, and not to let our right hand know what our left hand doeth. Paul says to the Christians in Corinth, "Upon the first day of the week let every one of you lay by him in store as God hath prospered him &c.," Now, sir, how does this correspond with our present way of doing things?

If all these who profess to be Christians were to give a tenth of all, there would be no need of resorting to such questionable methods as we have had so largely developed among us this past season to raise funds for religious purposes, nay, if we will take the Apostolic injunction for our model, which I think Christians are bound to do, and give as the Lord has prospered us, there would be no need to complain for want of funds.

True, spiritual things must be spiritually discerned, and if the prosperity referred to by the apostle is intended to apply only to our spiritual prosperity then the problem is solved. The difficulty of raising funds inside the church instead of appealing to the outside would be apparent, for there are many indications of a "falling away," of a "leanness" in this respect. I believe there is—always has been, and ever will be—a "seed" in the church that although the church should be shorn of its leaves and appear like her great Head "as a root out of dry ground." Still there will be a seed left, and that seed will always be ready to give as "the Lord has prospered him." Indeed, I truly believe that the real Christian feels it to be not only a duty to give thus, but a privilege when he is in a position to give "liberally, and I am sure there is not one Christian who would not much rather put his hand into his pocket and give his share for truly religious purposes, than see his "Father's House" turned into a "House of Merchandise," where so much bread and butter, songs and laughable recitations &c., are given in exchange for twenty-five cents, wherewith to meet the requirements of a Christian Church. This is surely not Christianity, and the sooner the practice is abandoned the better.

Do not suppose Mr. Editor, that I am unfriendly to Congregational Tea meetings—not at all, I like the friendly social gathering, but we should "do all things to edifying." In looking back to the time when such meetings were first held in connection with churches, I see another cause of sadness, another "falling away."—When congregational tea meetings or soirees were first introduced, it was for purposes very different from those so ardently pursued now-a-days. The original intention was a sort of "re-union" upon a purely intellectual and Christian basis, a feast was provided well qualified to nourish and cheer the Christian on his pilgrimage heavenward. Several eminent divines along with some other "Fathers in the church" would bring out their treasures new and old, and food enough to satisfy all. These addresses were interspersed with Sacred Anthems, from the best musical composers, sung, not played, by the best singers to be had; I say not played, for in those days Dissenters needed not the assistance of an instrument in praising their Maker. No, "they tuned their heart." At these meetings admission was always free, and the necessary expenses defrayed by collection. The poor and the rich all mingled together; all felt at home. Austerity and rudeness were alike unknown. The idea of selling the cake, speeches, and singing for the sake of profit was never thought of, to do so is an innovation of recent date, and that too of an anti-Christian type. The Christian church is likened to a family—part of the family of heaven, let us therefore have our congregational tea meetings in a family way, and let them be instructive and edifying, and let us cease to aim so much at "drawing a crowd" for the purpose of replenishing the coffers of the church.

Hoping that you will find space and that others may come forward and discuss in a friendly way this important subject. I may in a week or two send you a few lines in reference to our worship compared with the Apostolic and early Christian Churches.

Your's truly,

M.

One of two things should be done when ever a young tree has been planted—either mulch around the treewith straw, leaves or grassy sods, cut into pieces, or keep the ground cultivated all summer. The mulching need not be done before the middle of June.

The well-known family medicines of Dr. J. C. Ayers & Co. have been before the public forty years, and time strengthens the favorable impression with which they were at first received. We have been in the habit of using them ourselves, and recommending them to our acquaintances. Ayer's Pills are a perfect regulator of the system; Ayer's Extract of Sarsaparilla is the best known purifier of the blood; Ayer's Cherry Pectoral is a safe and sure remedy in complaints of the throat and lungs; and Ayer's Ague cure is an effectural cure in cases of Fever and Ague and other malarial fevers. Those medicines are compounded with skill and accurate medical knowledge, and they are in no sense to be classed with the cheap nostrums of the day. The formulas from which they are prepared are not secret, but are furnished to all physicians, and are published for the benefit of all interested.—St. Johns, P. Q., News.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

SIR,—I noticed in the editorial column of the last issue of the Advance a cutting criticism of a poem on the late London Disasterr It is worthy of notice. I remember reading of a poet whose first attempt did not even receive the honor of being abused, and who afterwards attained considerable celebrity. How much greater my success! I have on my first attempt attained to the great honor of being abused by the Editor of this, though barely fledged, yet already widely-famed local educator, known for the immense amount of solid and digested matter it contains. O! Fame, how have I grasped thee? I don't pretend to be either a Homer or a Virgil yet, but who is to say what I shall be? I refer you to the Advance. Did the first essay of either of these receive such an honor? This Editor don't pretend to criticise any part of the production; but with a four lined couplet of most likely his own production (for who else has the genius for it) which certainly does him credit, though my advice to him would be to try again, and then,—swallow the pen. If I had known this maiden attempt of mine was to receive such an honor, how many sleepless nights I would have spent over it, how many almanacs I would have consulted, how I would have weighed each word and balanced each sentence before I would have launched it before such a critic. O, abused and ill-used muse, how will I have to spurn thee from me in the future for fear of killing some Americans. Though perhaps in riper years when I am able to judge of such a production, if thou shouldst seize and retain me in thy grasp in spite of fate I will certainly favor the Advance with the first production, knowing that his judgment will not suffer its publication if not worthy of that honor. Looking far into the future I can see him sitting in his sanctum, in all the glory of gray hairs and a life well spent, and reviewing the past, thinking especially of the labor he has expended that the natives of Artemesia might not be imposed upon by any ignorant rhymer.

EXTINGUISHED LIGHT.

By the timely use of the Extract of Wild Strawberry you may avert all disagreeable summer complaints, diarrhoea, dysentery, cholera morbus, etc., nothing is so pleasant in its cure, so rapid, reliable, and effectual, as Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. And the value of this medicine as an antidote in sour stomach, colic, cramps, seasickness, vomiting, and other irritations of the stomach and bowels is incalculable. It is safe and sure, and should be carried in the haversack of every traveller and tourist.

PARODY.

The great boo-hoo from Flesherton: See last week's Advance on "What we require."

I.

It does seem strange that there should be
In Flesherton a lack,
Of either push or enterprise—
Yet such is the hard fact.
(Oh! Oh!! Oh!!!)

II.

We actually in the village have
A Brick-yard;
But in the whole place there are not five
Brick Buildings.
(Prodigious!)

[illegible]

VII.

But then those other poor souls are in a worse fix,
For they live in a state of nature;
And like poor Mungo Park in the wilds of Africa,
Have neither house nor shop.
(Are there no umbrellas in Flesherton? If not, why not get up a subscription?)

VIII.

But this state of things must stop;
For have we not men of means in our midst,
Who could easily put up houses or shops.
And then, boys! look how it would pay!!
(Aye, that's it! how it would pay?)

IX.

Then who will break the ice?
Oh! who will break it, who?
For Flesherton's in a dreadful fix,
And the Advance in a great boo.hoo!

CHORUS:

Hoo! boo! hoo!!
It's an awful hullabaloo!
But Flesherton's got in a dreadful fix,
And it's organ sobs boo-hoo! boo-hoo!
And it's organ sobs boo-hoo!!!

Editor STANDARD:—

Dear Sir, That notable article in the "Advance" last week, is a beautiful illustration of refined poetical modesty. The writer is evidently unaware of the divine poetical breathings that involuntarily flow from his pen. I would fain rescue this rose from the sad fate of blushing unseen. Hence the foregoing parody, Mr. Editor, which I have sent you, well knowing that you will rejoice in resuscitating from self-immolation this astonishing genius. Shades of the mighty poets of the ages! Your work's done! A new poetical epoch is commenced, and he of the "Advance" is its exponent. Poor Clark! Poor Clark!! Poor Clark!!! Then observe the critical acumen displayed in that other article beginning with "Our palmiest days." Ponder, Sir, the length and breadth of that expression—"In our palmiest days!" Imagine the author of that immortal poetical production given above, having enjoyed "palmier days." If such his power of creation now, what must it not have been in the "palmy days." Palmy days and boo-hooing have a close connection in some minds, but of course would not hold good in his. Those who read the poetical critique, and then those fine poetic breathings in "What we require," will probably agree with me that undoubtedly a "Daniel has come to judgment."—Tremble, ye local poets! The gifted Nine have located in Flesherton, and preside only in that "house or shop" occupied by the "Advance."

QUIZ.

SCARLET FEVER.

Dr. Both, of Boston, furnishes Good Health with a paper in which he discusses scarlet fever and its treatment:

It always begins with a loss of appetite; then red patches; then recovery, or otherwise quick or slow death, according to circumstances. To arrest its course, and to prevent its ravages, medicines and manipulations ad libitum have been tried in vain; for more children die of scarlet fever now than one thousand years ago.—But why? Because nothing, absolutely nothing, is as yet known as to what scarlet fever is; and what is still worse, there was, until recently, no need felt of such knowledge.

It is as unnecessary for a child to die of scarlet fever as it is that it should be blind with cataract. Let us see. At anytime before the body has finished its ineffectual struggle we are able to help it, not by wonderful medicines, but by the knowledge of anatomy, and the application of common sense. We consult the sympathetic nerve, and do what it commands us to do. We must give the child salt when it wants it; we must give it acid when it has fever and anxiously craves it—not vinegar, but lemon juice, because the first coagulates albumen, the latter does not, on account of the surplus of oxygen which it contains. To imitate the soothing mucous in the intestines, which is now wanting, and to give some respiratory food at the same time, we add some gum-arabic. To restore and relieve the injured nerve, we apply moist warmth.

In practice we can fulfil all this with the following simple manipulations: Undress the child and bring it to bed at the first signs of sickness. Give it, if it has already fever nothing but lemonade, with some gum-arabic in it. Then cover its abdomen with dry flannel. Take a [illegible]ll folded bed sheet, and put it in [illegible]ling hot water; wring it out dry [illegible] means of dry towels, and put this [illegible]r the flannel on the child's abdomen. Then cover the whole, and [illegible]it. The hot cloth will perhaps require repeated heat. According to [illegible] severity of the case, and its stage [illegible] progress, prespiration will commence in the child in from ten minutes to two hours. The child is then [illegible]ved; it soon falls asleep. Soon after the child awakes it shows slight symptoms of returning inclination for food; help its bowels if necessary, with injections of oil, soap and water, and its recovery will be as steady as the growth of a green-house plant, if well treated. Of course, if the child is already dying, nothing could save [illegible] or if it has already effusions in the [illegible]ing of the heart or brain, it is much better that it should die. But if the above is applied in due time, under the eyes and direction of a competent physician, I will guarantee that not one in a hundred children will die of scarlet fever. I know this will startle some of my readers, but I shall go still further. I maintain that a child will never get the fever if properly treated. If a child has correctly mixed blood, it will not catch the disorder [illegible] put in bed with a sick child. This [illegible] still more startling, but nothing is easier of proof. The same is also true [illegible] whooping-cough, cholera infantum, &c. I refer to Prof, Von Niemeyer's treatment of whooping-cough; it consists of equal temperature in a room [illegible] 75 degrees, and the regulation of appropriate digestion. He warrants, by following this simple course, every case of whooping-cough to disapper in three weeks, I think even this could be shortened. Lemon-juice, salt, gum-arabic, and heat, are all that is required in cholera infantum—only the restoration of digestion is here more difficult, on account of the intestinal linings being injured directly.

NO [illegible].—No man can do a good job of work, preach a good sermon, try a law suit well, doctor a patient, or write a good article when he feels miserable and dull, with sluggish brain and unsteady nerves, and none should make the attempt in such a condition when it can be so easily and cheaply removed by a little Hop Bitters.—Albany Times.

Be Wise and Happy.—If you will stop all your extravagant and wrong notions in doctoring yourself and families with expensive doctors or humbug cure-alls, that do harm always, and use only nature's simple remedies for all your ailments—you will be wise, well and happy, and save great expense. The greatest remedy for this, the great, wise and good will tell you, is Hop Bitters—rely on it.—Press.

Travellers and tourists should always be provided with Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, the best remedy in the world for curing suffering brought on for eating unripe or sour fruits, bad milk, impure water, change of water and climate. The great remedy for all summer complaints.

That money can be had at 6 per cent, is a sure indication that the times are good and the country in a prosperous condition. If any of our readers doubt that the needful can be procured at the above rate, they can ascertain the fact by calling on Mr. J. G. Irving, who has any amount to lend on good security, at 6 per cent. only.

It appears that some evil disposed person as twisted a wrong meaning out of a paragraph published in these columns some few weeks ago, touching a rumor detrimental to the characters of the wives of Messrs. Geo. and Jas. Ward. To set the matter at rest we now state that we were shown a written denial, signed by Mr. McFarland, stating that there was not the least particle of truth in the rumor.

On our last visit to Dundalk, we noticed that Mr. Peter McGrogor, had put a first class Planer and Matching Machine into his saw mill, and is now turning out dressed lumber and matched flooring. He also turns out large quantities of undressed lumber, Shingles, and Lath. Mr. McGregor's enterprise deserves to be crowned with success, and we hope the people of Dundalk and vicinity will patronize him largely.

The most pleasant, rapid, reliable and effectual remedy yet discovered for diarrhœa, dysentery, cholera morbus, cholera infantum, and all summer complaints, is Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. It is unsurpassed as a reliable specific in the above diseases, is well known as a great remedial agent, and is more highly valued the longer it is known. Travellers and tourists should carry a supply in their haversack. For sale by all Dealers in Medicinies.

Serious Railway Accident,—The mixed train going north on Saturday night last, met with rather a serious accident when near Berkeley station. The train ran over some cattle which had got on the road, resulting in throwing three cars off the track, one of which was filled with horses intended for Manitoba. Two of the horses were killed, and several others severely injured. Fortunately none of the train hands were injured. It was a narrow escape, however, as the embankment where the accident occurred is rather steep. One of the cattle was killed, and some of the others injured,

Thousands of children are lost annually from cholera infantum, diarrhœa, and the summer complaints, whose lives might be preserved by using Extract of Wild Strawberry. Physicians recommend and use it constantly. It is a remedy well known, and more highly valued the longer known. It is for sale at all drug stores, and is within reach of every one. See advertisements in another column.

Contractors should read advertisement of Tenders wanted for the erection of a two story brick building. Plans and specifications can be seen at this office.

The time for receiving Tenders will be extended to the 8th inst. Those already received will not be opened until that time.—C. W. Rutledge.

Wedding Rings in great demand now, and Wilcox, our Jeweller, is showing some beauties.

Underhand.—Last Monday our Town was visited by Mr. T. Harris, License Inspector for South Grey, in consequence of a letter received by him, purporting to come from Peter E. Duff, giving information against certain parties here for alleged infractions of the License Law. When Mr. Harris called upon the alleged informant, he discovered that the letter was a forgery. Either the parties wished to perpetrate a mean act, and lacked the brute courage to carry out their design ; or, wished to play a practical joke upon Mr. Harris, bringing him here on a fool's errand.—Either view of the case is contemptible.

The remedy that has had the most remarkable success in the cure of diarrhœa, dysentery, cholera morbus, and, indeed, every kind of summer complaint, brought on by eating improper food, such as raw vegetables, unripe or sour fruits, bad milk, impure water, etc.,—the remedy that is the most pleasant, rapid, reliable, and effectual, is Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. It is the finest remedy for summer complaints known. For sale by all dealers.

Maine farmers are going to make a study of the subject of artificial fertilizers this summer, under the management of the Board of Agriculture. Plots of one-twentieth acre each, will be planted with barn manure, dissolved bone back and potash, a full ration of complete fertilizer. Farmers are expected to conduct the experiments with care, and to note the appearance of the crop during the entire growing season. Although experiments of this kind cannot be expected to settle the many questions the first year, yet they will tend to make farmers more familiar with nature and action of special fertilizers, and may, after a time, acquaint them with any peculiarity in the composition of the soil in their own farms.

Thousands of our little ones are lost annually from cholera infantum, diarrhœa and the summer complaints, whose lives might be preserved by the timely use of Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, the greatest and most reliable specific known for all summer ailments. For sale at all Drug Stores. See advertisements in another column.

A writer in the American Farmer has tried the following, worked well into the sod under pear trees, to prevent bight, and so far as tried, with satisfactory results: One quart of slacked lime, one quart bone phosphate, and one once of sulphur for each tree.

Markdale, April 15, 1881.

THE LIME-KILN CLUB.

"Some one has kindly sent me some werry interestin' statisticks on religus affairs," began the President as he held up a pamphlet. "It gibs the number of converts in India, Africa, China an' Japan doorin' de las' y'ar; it gibs de number of Sunday schools in America; it gibs de number o' Christians in each State in de Union; it gibs de amount of money collected fur heathens, an' de number of Bibles and Testaments printed las' y'ar. While I am werry much obliged to de unknown donor, I mus' confess my disappointment at not findin' fuller perticklers. Fur instance, how many Americans war' saved las y'ar? I can't fin' dat one single clergyman went down among de poo' an' lowly an' saved a soul from perdishun. While dey am cryin' ober de heathen across de sea America has 25,000,000 sinners. Fur ebery sermon delibered in makin' heathen converts abrod America has ten murders, a hundred robberies, an' no end of smaller crimes. Show me a clergyman who stands in his pulpit an' sheds tears ober de niggers of Africa, an' I'll show you more vice an' wickedness widin gunshot of his church dan he could fin' in a hundred squar' miles in Africa. Has any preacher in Detroit or Chicago or New York saved de soul of one single home heathen dis las' y'ar? Has any congregations raised one single nickle to convert gamblers, thieves, prostitutes an' defaulters to Christianity? while our ministers shed tears ober de darkness which reigns in Egypt, one-fifth of our populashun make Sunday a holiday. I kin walk out on dat day an' see races, games, excursions, open stores, fights, riots an' drunkeness. Who could see mo' in Africa? Ebery day I read of murder, robbery, arson an' plunder. Kin it be any worse in China? Ebery newspaper am full of elopements, defalcations an' scandals. Am society in Japan any worse?

"I tell you, my frens, dar am a heap in de Bible dat am all right, an' dar' am a heap in dis so called Christianity dat am all rong. Christianity dat will send thousands of dollars ober de sea an' let white women at home shibber wid cold an' hunger fur bread isn't founded on the Bible. Christianity dat preaches virtue an' den furnish a list of 228 church scandals in a single ya'r cannot be respected. Christianity dat sniffles ober de poo' an' yit leaves dem widout a visit or a word or a nod am purty thin stuff. Christianity dat holds noon prayer meetins down town an' beat its house rent, water tax, an' gas bills up town haint de sort I'm lookin' arter. Christianity dat keeps away from de wicked, wicked theater, an' owes de grocer four six months, de butcher for a y'ar, an' makes a sewin' gal do $10 wort of work for about $6, won't be incouraged in dis club.

"Yes, I'ze much obleged to de pusson who sent me dis leetle book, but I shall still cling to my belief dat when the day of judjment finally arrives de Lawd will have no trouble in pickin' out the hypocrites an' liars from the airnest, conscienshus Christian diskivered in de crowd. I say nuffin' again pure religion; I say nuffin' agin square' Christians. But when dat las' day rolls 'roun' I'd sooner stan' befo' de Lawd charged wid highway robbery dan wid havin' been a sham Christian an' a sanctimonious hypocrite."

NOTES ON VARIOUS SUBJECTS.

Turkeys are very useful in destroying insects, and of great service in orchards in devouring winfalls, and preventing the growth of worm eaten fruit.

Give the young chickens a weekly feed of chopped onions. It helps to keep them healthy. A medium size onion minced very fine is enough for a brood.

Hanging baskets should be placed where they can have an abundance of light and sunshine, and not near the stove or register. If the light comes from one side, the basket should be turned every day.

Those who wish to keep insects in check must never have any tomorrow about their ways, but act as soon as the eggs, chrysalis, or vermin in any size are seen. Destroy the first lot and it is rare that there is much trouble after..

A man can raise more corn on twenty-acres if it is thoroughly manured, carefully ploughed, and kept free from weeds, than he can on forty acres, with the same amount of manure and time to give to it that he could give to his twenty.

When doctors disagree who shall decide. The people often decide by throwing physic to the dogs,' and trying BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS, and the result is always satisfactory. Burdock Blood Bitters is the Multum in Parvo of medical science, curing all diseases of the Blood, Liver and Kidneys. A trial bottle only costs 10 cents. A dollar botle may save you a good many dollars in doctor's bills.

The Prairie Farmer says, "weeds on gravel walks may be destroyed and prevented from growing again by a copious dressing of the cheapest salt. This is a better method than hand pulling, which desturbs the gravel and renders almost constant raking and rolling necessary. One application early in the season, and others as may be needed, while the weeds are small, will keep the walks clean and bright.

Matthew Crawford states in an exchange that the destruction of tomato plants by the cut worm may be avoided by making a comact mound of earth about the plants as large as a teacup, the cut worm being unable to climb. Another way, which we have long practiced, is to wrap around the stem, if the cut worm is feared, a few inches of paper or a large green leaf of any kind, before drawing the earth around it. They will not take the trouble to knaw through the paper or leaf.

The effects of Pairs green applied to potato vines upon the tubors, has been the theme of considerable discussion. H. C. Fish, of Worcester, applied an ounce of pure Paris green around and on the tubers in a hill of potatoes, which were about one third grown and submitted to a pratical chemist for Analysis, who reported though he found Paris green adhering to the skins, it was easily removed by washing, and no trace whatever of arsenic was found in the tubers themselves.

Now is the fighting time for the gardener. Currant worms on the currant bushes, cut worms eating the cabbage plants, all sorts of bugs at work on cucumber and squash plants is the order of the day. But the pests, including potato bugs, can all be destroyed. White hellebore sprinkled on the leaves of the currant bushes in the morning when the dew is on will save your currants. Sulphur placed around your tomato and cabbage plants will keep of the worms to a great extent. Soot from chimneys and stovepipes, and wood ashes with lime, are good to keep away insects of various kinds.

A Canadian agriculturist last season tried an experiment with potatoes that is worth noting. It was done by scooping out every eve from the potato and inserting in the flesh of it a single eye, of different kind, and planting the seed thus prepared, obtaining thereby very curious crosses, which he exhibited at the Toronto Industrial Exhibition. The tubers were small as the first year's product from seed, and appear to partake of the characteristics of both the orignal varieties; whether they reproduce themselves the second year or revert to one or other of the types, is yet to be determined original.

Girls Take Warning.—A county exchange says:—"On getting up on Sunday morning last Mrs. A. Washburn started to yawn, and put her jaw out of joint. The service of a doctor had to be procured to replace it." Young men whose girls are accustomed to yawn repeatedly during their presence, should paste this on the outside rim of their hats.

GREAT ANNUAL
CLEARIG SALE,
AT THE
POST OFFICE STORE,
FLESHERTON.

In order to make room for heavy Spring Importations now arriving daily, I have decided reducing my present large and well selected and assorted stock of

GENAERAL DRY GOODS, FURS, MILLIERY,
Ready-Made Clothing,
BOOTS AND SHOES,
Hats, Caps and Groceries
TO THE LOWEST POINT POSSIBLE,

and in order to do so,

Will Sell at and Under COST,
FOR THE NEXT THIRTY DAYS.

The stock is all new, well bought, and well worth the attention of the closet buyers. In GROCERIES you will find evrything of First-Class Value.

As I do not pursue the course of some of our windy Merchants of our neighboring Villages, of sending out numerous samples of cheap trash (with unscrupulous recommendations) outside our natural business relations, in order to impress the public that they are not properly treated by their more honorable dealers, and draw custom from the many.

You will find everything that I sell just as I represent it, and as good value as you can possibly get for your money anywhere, as I have always held that honorable dealing is the only true course for a business man.

My Groceries are all bought for strictly nett cash, consequently I can and will sell at

The Lowest Possible Prices!
For CASH and FARM PRODUCE
BUT NOT FOR CREDIT.

I have also in stock and for sale, a large quantity of

PURE SEED GRAIN!

Such as White Russian, Glasgow, Red Chaff, and other varieties of Spring wheat. Also Pure Clean Peas, Oats and Barley. Prime Timothy and Clover Seed; also Fresh Garden Seeds, and as it pays each and every Farmer to sow clean seed, you will make money by paying a few cents extra, and purchasing a good article.

I am now selling large quantities of

COARSE LAND SALT,
FOR MANURE,

Which will pay every Farmer Five Dollars for every one invested in it, and as I am anxious that every Farmer in this locality and neighboring Townships shall try it, have decided in selling in five and ten barrel lots at the Lowest Cash Price laid down by the car direct from the Manufacturers, and bought for nett cash at Bottom Prices.

I would also intimate that my

COUNTY COUNCIL.

From the Owen Sound Advertiser.

THURSDAY, 2 P.M.

Council met pursuant to adjournment from yesterday. Warden in the chair.

Mr. Cameron, presented report of Road and Bridge Committee, which on motion was adopted.

The Warden read the report of the School Inspector of North Grey.

Mr. McRae moved and Mr. Reid seconded, That no session of this Council be held in December, as a saving of $800 can be accomplished thereby, and that no other session be held unless ... the Warden thinks it necessary to call a special meeting ...

Mr. McRae said he had made a similar motion at a previous meeting of this Council; thought that no member of this Council should cast his vote against this motion, without giving a good and substantial reason for so doing. Was in conversation with the County Treasurer, and that gentman though there was no necessity for a December Session.

Moved in amendment by Mr. Middleton seconded by Mr. Myles, that June and December Session be done away with in future, and that the rate be struck in January instead of June.

The mover of the amendment said the necessity existing for a December Session had passed away. The same might be applied to any other session The rate could be struck in January as well as June; though they could as well do away with June Session as December.

Mr. McIntyre thought that if the business of each session could be done in three days instead of six, it would be more economical; but three sessions were necessary. Did not consider it would be wise to make a donation to the present Warden, for instance, before he completed his duties.

Mr. Fox though there was a good deal of buncome about both resolutions the best economy would be to reduce the pay to $1.50 or $2.00 per day, and do the business in three or four days.

Moved by Mr. Totten, seconded by Mr. Clark, in amendment to the amendment. That the three sessions of the Council be held the same as usual, but that the sessions be no longer than four days each.

Mr. A. Read, said that it had not been shown as yet taht there was any necessitp for a December Session. Did not thing either amendments amounted to anything. The result of the amendment to the amendment could be to necessitate Special Sessions, which would not be much economy. Did not see the use of bringing forth Reeves here in December to do nothing at all.

Mr. Blyth thought it would be well to do away with December Sessions, Was of the same opinion as the Reeve of Glenelg.

Mr, McNicol thought it was necessary to hold three sessions, but was in favour of shortening them.

Mr. Murdock moved a third amendment as follows:—That the December Sessionbe not dispensed with, but that this Council meet on Wednesday instead of Monday next December.

Mr. Read said not a single member had as yet shown the necessity for a December Session. The speaker wanted to know what had been done in December last, If there was any necessity for a third session, let the Warden call a special session,

Mr. Clark said he noticed a good deal of loafing around the streets by the members of the Council. Thought the business could be done in less time. The Warden—had suggested that the address should be done away with, which if done, would be the means of saving one day.

Mr. Murdoch's third amendment was put and declared a tie. The Warden gave his casting vote in favor of the 3rd amendment, thus making the December Session four days instead of six.

Mr. Sing, presented report No. 2 of County Property Committee, recommending that owing to the high price of coal that hereafter wood would be used instead.

Mr. Sing in presenting his report said the expense of coal the past session was upward of $590, which he thought to much, and suggested that a wood furnace substitated for the one now in use, which he thought would be much cheaper in the end.

On motion Report No. 4 of the Finance and Assessment was adopted and engrossed on the minutes.

Mr. Sing presented Report on House of Industry, recommending that no action be taken in the matter at present.

On motion of Mr. Clark, seconded by Mr. Stark, Report No. 2 on Road and Bridges was adopted and engrossed on the minutes.

Mr. McKechnie presented Report No. 2, of Finance and Assessment.

Moved by Mr. Abbott, seconded by Mr. Donald. That the Report of Special Committee on House of Industry be adopted and engrossed on the minutes.—Carried.

COUNCIL ROOM, 7 P. M.

Council met. All the members present. The Warden in the chair.

The Report of School Inspector Grier, for East Riding, was read by the Warden, giving attendance of scholars in the different Townships.

The Council went into committee of the Whole on Report No. 2 of the Educational Committee. Mr. Campbell in the chair.

Clause 1, recommending an additional grant of $500 to the High School, was read and passed after considerable discussion. The Report was adopted and engrossed in the minutes.

Mr. McKechnie presented Report No. 3 of Finance and assessment.

On motion of Mr. Middleton, seconded by Mr. Sing, the Council went into committee of the whole, Mr. Myles in the chair.

Clause 1—Recommending that the salary of Mr. John Miller, Court House-keeper, be increased from $90 to $150 was passed.

Clause 2—Haye had under consideration a matter of arranging a settlement on the separation of Melancthon and Shelburn from this County, which had been recently left to arbitration, which was passed.

The Warden said he was one of the arbitrators in this matter, and the only thing not being finally settled was under By-law No. 174.

Mr. McRae advocated the adoption of the agreement rather than going into arbitration again.

Mr. McGirr, thought it would be well for the Treasurer to address the Council on the arrangement with Melancthon.

Mr. Parker, the County Treasurer, was then asked to address the Council. He shewed the basis upon which the award of $2100 to be paid to Melancthon under general account had been arrived at, and also award of $272,96 to the County under By-Law 107, and the award of $12,235 to the Municipalities grouped under Railway By-Law 174. At the first meeting held at Flesherton, it was mutually agreed that the County of Dufferin should issued its debentures at 10 yrs with interest at 6 per cent payable half yearly for the above amount of $12,235, but subsequently it was found that under the Special Act incorporating the County of Dufferin it was provided that each municipality forming the County of Dufferin, should settle its own indebtedness with the County from which it was taken. This discovery necessitated another meeting of the arbitrators to change the award from County of Dufferin to the township of Melancthon, which meeting was held in Shelburne, but unfortunately he was not able to be present, or yet Mr. Middleton, therefore the Warden was the sole representative for our County. At this Shelburne meeting the former award as to general account and By-Law 107 were sustained, but the award to By-law 174 was slightly changed in this respect, that Melancthon refused to provide a sinking fund to meet the $12,235, but preferred to pay the amount in ten annual payments with interest at 6 per cent on unpaid principal, to which the Warden finally agreed. This arrangement was was not as good as that entered into at Flesherton by about $650, but as fair and equitable settlements has been effected under general account and By-Law 107, he would not recommend the matter to be again opened up to arbitration, as it was quite possible if again opened up that a much settlement of $12,235 might be arrived at, in such case with the present rate of interest we are receiving on our sinking fund investments, such a settlement would be worse than even the Shelburne one, in fact many points such as Melancthon claim to a share of the profits on sinking fund already paid in, might be raised, and endless litigation and expense be caused, therefore taking every thing into consideration he strongly urged upon the Council the desirability of ratifying the Shelburne award.

Mr. Sing presented Report No. 6 of County Property Committee recommending that the Coal Stoves in the Court House and Goal be replaced with Wood Stoves, and that the Coal Furnaces be also replaced with one for burning wood. That 120 cords of wood be purchased for the use of Goal and Court House.

Council went into Committee of the whole on By-Law No. 296 to levy a rate to meet interest on By-Law No. 174, which was passed without amendment.

Mr. Sing presented Report of Special Committee, recommending that the salary of the Gaol Surgeon be increased from $250 to $260, which was adopted.

Council adjourned until 7 p.m. Friday evening.

FRIDAY EVENING 7 O'CLOCK.

Council meet Friday evening and adjourned until Saturday morning at 9 o'clock.

SATURDAY 9 A.M.

Members all present, the Warden in the chair. Minutes of Friday read and confirmed.

Moved by Mr. McKechnie, seconded by Mr. Messenger, That By-Laws Nos. 292, 293, 294, 295 be read a third time and engrossed on the minutes.

Mr Murdoch said in prosecuting a Pedlar for selling without a licence, in his township, the result of the case was likely to be adverse to them on account of not having a certified By-Law in regard to the same.

Moved by Mr. McColman, seconded by Mr. Thompson, that the 25c. per day per man be granted to the rank and file of the 31st Battalion now in camp at Niagara, and that such same be paid by the Treasurer to the Captain of each Company for distribution among the men, and that certified lists of the same be furnished to this Council—carried.

The yeas and nays being called for on this motion were as follows:—

Yeas—Wright, McColman, Campbell, Kerr, Stark, McRae, Hall, Howey, Cameron, Reid, McKechnie, Fox, Sparrow, Vasey, Kennedy, Malcom, Thompson—17.

Nays—McNichol, McCallum, Messenger, Myles, Boyd, Murdoch, McIntyre, Totten, McNaught, Winkler' McGirr, Sing, Abbott, Long Donald—15.

Capt. Butchart, being present, thanked the Council for the grant they had just made to the Volunteers of the 31st. It was an acknowledged fact that our Regiment was the best drilled and finest regiment at camp this year. The good conduct of the 31st was remarked by overyone. One of his reasons for coming from Manitoba was to go into camp with and take command of his company once more at least.

Moved by Mr. Cameron, seconded by Mr. Hall, that $50 be granted to repair the sink-hole in Allen's swamp on the Toronto and Sydenham road —lost.

Mr. McKechnie moved an amendment that $49.99 be granted, and that $75 be also granted for the purpose of covering the Bridge in the town of Durham, which was lost.

On motion made and seconded the Council adjourned until the second Wednesday in December at 7 o'clock, p.m.

No GOOD PREACHING.—No man can do a good job of work, preach a good sermon, try a law suit well, doctor a patient, or write a good article when he feels miserable and dull, with sluggish brain and unsteady nerves, and none should make the attempt in such a condition when it can be so easily and cheaply removed by a little Hop Bitters.—Albany Times.

JOKE ON PHRENOLOGY.

Fowler, phrenologist, was the victim of a mean trick by a Washington man. The latter had three photographs of himself taken, in one of which he appeared dressed as a woman; in another as a well to do architect; in the third as a spectacled professor. Then he sent the photographs on to Fowler for phrenological description. He received in a few days three charts. The "architect, was described as an impulsive person, of strong lung power, etc.; the "woman" seemed to have less lung power than the architect, and appeared "able to convert nutritious materials into healthy nutriment rapidly and abundantly." The two were well adapted to marriage. As to the "professor," he was described as unfit to marry, being of uncongenial temperament, etc.

STRANGLED IN A PERAMBULATOR

An infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. S. Crabbe, of Vanauley street, Toronto, met its death on Tuesday under somewhat peculiar circumstances. Its mother had it out during the forenoon in a perambulator, and on coming in just before noon placed it, still in the perambulator, in a darkened room while she attended to her culinary duties. On going into the rooom sometime afterwards Mrs. Crabbe was horrified to find the little thing suspended from the carriage by the strap used to fasten it in and quite dead. It had evidently tried to get out, and in so doing had got caught by the neck after its body was over the side. The police were notified and subsequently the coroner. An inquest was not deemed necessary.

"MURDER WILL OUT."

DR. H. C. HALL SUSPECTED OF HAVING BEEN ... BY HIS ... A MAN ...

DAVISBURG, June 30.—About thirteen months ago Mrs. H. C. Hall died under circumstances which led to the belief that her death was caused by poison administered by her husband, a prominent physician of this place, but more recently from Corunna, the supposed cause being his criminal affection for a widow named Murgatroyd.

Dr. Hall was arrested on a charge of murder, but previous to his arrest the body was exhumed by his direction and the viscera removed by Dr. W. C. Wade, of Holly, assisted by the widower, and it is claimed sent to Detroit for analysis, though that has not been proved, and no trace of the parts can be found. The body was returned to the grave, but a few nights afterwards was stolen, and from that day till this morning it has been impossible to obtain any information which would lead to its recovery. In the meantime, Dr. Hall has been tried, the jury has disagreed, a new trial has been ordered, and the accused released on bail.

This morning, in consequence of the confession of a man who said he was one of the six who robbed the grave, the body was found under a straw stack on the farm of Isaac Davis, about half a mile from the cemetery in which it had been buried. The news of the discovery spread like wildfire, and soon hundreds of people from the neighborhood assembled at the spot, coming by every train from villages and cities along the line of the railroad, and by teams from other points, until this afternoon over 2,000 were thronging this little village, the total population of which is only a trifle over 300. The body was crammed in a barrel, the head and feet projecting from one end, and the whole in a perfect state of preservation; the skin white as marble, the flesh hard, and the features as beautiful in death as they had been in life. There was not a trace of offensive odour, and the opinion was freely expressed that so much arsenic must have been administered to the poor woman previous to her death as to act as a perfect preservative. The excitement was intense, and still continues. The impression is now universal that the woman was murdered by her husband, and if he had been where he could have been captured at any time to-day or this evening he would have been strung up to the nearest tree without the ceremony of a trial. As it is, there is a strong sentiment in favor of capturing and hanging him wheresoever he may take refuge, even if he has himself locked up in gaol for safety, as it is now thought he will do. He was in Corunna when the discovery was made to-day, and in obedience to a telegraphic warning started for Pontiac, where he now is. When he passed through that place, on the train which was here at 9 o'clock this evening, he was notified of the feeling against him, and of the necessity of his presence being unknown. There was an immense crowd at the depot, but they were not told of his being on the train, and to guard against discovery he crouched under the seats, those who were aware of his doing so not letting it be known until after the cars had left the station.—Detroit Free Press.

A WONDERFUL CLIMATE.

A WOMAN PRESENTS HER DELIGHTED HUSBAND WITH SEVEN GIRL BABIES AT ONE TIME.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., June 20.—A few days since the Courier-Journal contained a special from its Nashville correspondent to the effect that a woman residing in Jackson County, that State, had given birth to seven children at one time. The correspondent to-night telegraphs that after the first child was born the pains of labor continued. An examination convinced the physician that there were two instead of one, and the woman was soon delivered of a second child. Both girls. The physician gave directions as to the care of both mother and children, and prepared to take his leave. Before reaching his horse at the gate he was recalled, and delivered the woman of another girl baby. Again the physician took his leave, and again was recalled.

BRINGING TO LIGHT ANOTHER GIRL BABY.

This was considered remarkable, and the physician was greatly puzzled over the matter. He, however, congratulated the husband on his good fortune and departed for home. He had not gone more than half a mile when he was overtaken by the excited husband of the woman, who, in breathless haste, informed him that there was still another child to be born. Hastening back the physician arrived in time to aid in delivering the woman of her fifth child. The physician was then prevailed on by the husband and father to STAY DURING THE REMAINDER OF THE NIGHT.

He was not slow to accept the invitation and sat down to await developments. In the course of 15 or 20 minutes he was again called to the bedside of the woman and very soon the sixth child was breathing the breath of life. Morning dawned and the doctor took his leave, having had no sleep during the night. He threw himself across the bed on his arrival at home, and was soon sound asleep. About eight o'clock he was aroused by his wife, who stated that Mr. B—— was at the gate and wished to see him immediately. "What is the matter now?" asked the doctor. "Mary appears to be going to —— you know," replied Mr. B——.

"WHAT! ANOTHER ONE?"

exclaimed the doctor, excitedly. "That's it," said Mr. B., with a smile spreading his mouth from ear to ear. The doctor mounted his horse and was soon at the house of Mr. B——. He was too late, to be of any service, as the seventh child, a girl, was born ...

The doctor ... his services during the rest of the ... services were ... gentleman who made the above statement, and it is ... his exact words says he has seen the seven babies several times, and while not large, weighing from four to five pounds each, they appear to be

HEALTHY, WELL DEVELOPED CHILDREN.

The occurrence has created considerable excitement in the neighborhood, and the people for miles around flock to see the woman and her babies.

The husband is described as being of small stature, and, in fact, exceedingly thin, while the woman is said to be strong and healthy. Physicians here are considerably excited over the affair, and some are talking of paying the family a visit. A most singular feature of the children is that all of them have blue eyes and so closely resemble each other that it is hard to tell "which from t'other."

A BRIDE OF A DAY.

Mrs. Mahoney, Meriden Conn., who has just been divorced from her husband, to whom she was married more than two years ago, enjoys the reputation of being the only live woman who never lived a day with her husband. On the evening of the wedding a reception was held at the home of the bride's mother. Late in the evening the groom was missing. The bride joined in the search for him, and finally found him lying in a bed-room dead drunk. The sight aroused the fiery temper of the bride, and there followed a scene. She declared she would not live with him. The friends of the newly-made couple tried to conciliate the bride, but they did not succeed, Mahoney had apartments nicely furnished, to which he intended to bring his bride, but the inducements of a pretty home seemed to have no effect on the bride. She was only 16. The household goods were sold, and Mrs. Mahoney went to Vermont and Canada, where she had relatives.

AN ACCOMMODATING RAILROAD.

Several days ago a stranger made his appearance at the Union depot and asked Officer Button how long before a Grand River Valley train would go out.

"In about twenty minutes," was the reply.

" then I'll have time to get a drink, won't I?"

"You will."

"That's good. I always perfer to travel on a stiff horn of whiskey."

He returned in five minutes, wiped his mouth on the back of his hand and asked:

"Has any train gone yet?"

"No sir you still have fourteen minutes to spare.

"That's good, and I guess I'll go back for a little brandy."

When he again returned he felt in good spirits, and, ascertaining that he still had six minutes to spare, he said:

"Now that's what I call liberal, and I'll lay in one more drink."

The last one proved more than he could bear up under, and he was not seen again for three hours. Then he came around with a wobble in his gait and an uncertain look in his eyes, and asked:

"Shay, what time does that Gran' River Valley train go out?"

"In about four hours."

"Fo' hours? Why, that'll give me time to get drunk again. Most 'commodating railroad I ever saw, eh?"

"Yes."

"Shay, I doan' want to be mean. Go'n tell superintendent he needn't wait for me any longer, 'cause 't may delay others. He's a zentleman, he is, an' I'm, a zentleman, I am but when a zentleman holds a train for me mos' half a day I can't impose upon him any longer. Shay, do you ever cry when you get zhrunk? I do, an' if you've no 'jeckshuns I'll cry now."

No objections being made he cried.

TO PREVENT DIPHTHERIA.

To prevent diphtheria, and finally exterminate it, every man, woman and child throughout our land and the world should be brought to obey the laws of life and health. Parents should regularly feed, properly clothe and duly restrain all children, before they come to the years of understanding and accountability. This alone would do much. A late prominent physican of Paris estimated that 8,000 chilhren had died in that city, during the thirty years of his practice there, from short sleaves, short pants, and other kindred imprudence in the dressing of children. And I am fully convinced that as large a portion are sacrificed, in towns at least, in this country, for the same cause—all for the wicked fashion. And from careful observation, in this country and abroad, I am confident that at least as many more are carried off by improper food and irregularity in taking it; together with poisonous candies, and other unwholesome and indigestible trash, that no child or other person should eat.

WAS HE MURDERED.

ANOTHER MYSTERIOUS CASE AT THE FALLS.

The dead body recently found in the Niagara River, near the Canadian ferry at Niagara Falls, proved to be that of Oliver L. Rowell, who until February last resided at Bath, N. Y., and came to the Falls at that time for the purpose of establishing himself in business as a carriage painter. He had about $800 in money with him. He put up at the Niagara House, and was last seen in company with a man named Doyle, clerk of the Niagara House, and another man McKay. He suddenly disappeared and no trace has been found of him since until his dead body was picked up in the river. He was identified more by the clothing than anything else, owing to the body being much decomposed. A post-mortem examination revealed the fact that a pistol bullet had been fired into the head of Rowell, but whether by himself or some other person could not be determined. The jury brought in a verdict to that effect. The probabilities is that he was murdered for his money. He was a sober, man, of quiet disposition.

WHAT THE STANDARD WOULD LIKE TO SEE.

FEWER young boys on the streets after nine o'clock at night.

MORE of our villagers follow the examample of Messrs. Bowes, Hull, Dundas, E. Rutledge, and one or two others, in beautifying their grounds.

FEWER cows running at large.

BOYS of from 10 years up not permitted to use tobacco.

LESS profanity on our streets.

THE December sittings of our County Council done away with.

OUR County Council tackle the House of Refuge question, and settle it either one way or the other.

DOMINION DAY IN FLESHERTON.

THE weather was all that could be desired. At an early hour teams commenced pouring in loaded with men, women and children. A noteworthy feature on entering the village was the unusually large number of flags floating in the air from the business places as well as from many private dwellings, which betokens loyalty to our Dominion.

The horse races, which took place on the grounds of the East Grey Agricultural Society, came off in the afternoon, giving general satisfaction, and without any serious accident. The course was in excellent condition. There was good competition in each race. We have not yet learned what the receipts at the gate amounted to, but would judge from appearance there must have been over 1,000 spectators. We are unable to secure the prize list so far.

ATTEMPTED ASSASSINATION OF PRESIDENT GARFIELD.

On Saturday last, the whole world was thrown into deep sorrow at the report flashed over the wires, that an attempt had been made in cold blood, to assassinate the President of the United States.

No possible reason that we can see lead to the atrocious act. No more genial, talented and impartial statesman ever filled the chair of President of the United States. The high esteem in which he was held the world over, is shown by the messages of sympathy and sorrow that have been sent to him from all quarters of the globe. It is asserted by some that the cowardly scoundel who perpetrated the deed is insane, and was lead to the act from a desire to gain notoriety. Others again say it is the result of a deep laid plot by certain wire-pullers, to get the President out of their way as he was too straightforward and honorable to suit their purposes. For the sake of humanity we sincerely trust the first is the correct theory. At the time of writing the President is still alive and hopes are now being entertained of his ultimate recovery. We trust that these hopes may prove true and in saying so we believe we but utter the sentiments of every individual in our broad Dominion.

INTERESTING TO LADIES.

Our lady readers can hardly fail to have their attention called this week to the latest ... of improvements in the most useful of all domestic implements, the "sewing machine."

As we understand it, a machine for family use should meet first of all these requirements: It should be simple in its mechanism, so as to be easily managed; it should run easily, so as not to weary the worker unduly; it should do a wide range of work, that the owner need not wish for any other machine; it should be as nearly noiseless as possible, that it may not be a nuisance; it should be light, handsome, and durable, and as cheap as is consistent with excellence throughout.

These conditions the "Light Running New Home" certainly meets.

It has also several very important and useful attachments and "notions" of its own, which go far to make good its claims to popular favor.

Now a great many families have been and are still using the old machines—waiting for the times to improve; waiting for the latest improvements in designs and excellence.

But why delay longer? Considering the low price at which good machines are now sold, and the improvements that are made, now is a good time to buy, and the "New Home" specially recommends itself to purchasers on account of its superior mechanical construction, ease of management and reasonable price. Nearly half a million have been sold in the last three years, all of which are giving universal satisfaction. This unrivalled machine is manufactured by JOHNSON, CLARK & CO., 30 Union Square, New York, who wish us to say that all who will send for their new illustrated catalogue and enclose their advertisement (printed on another page), will receive a set of fancy advertising novelties of value to those collecting cards, &c.

EUGENIA.

From our own Correspondent.

THE Meaford Road Union S. S. visited Eugenia on Monday, and celebrated their annual pic-nic.

From the smiling countenances of the couples met we would imagine they had enjoyed themselves immensely, notwithstanding that the thermometer registered 60° odd in the shade.

RED TAPE.—The Duputy Commissioner of Crown Lands is to visit Eugenia on Thursday, the 7th in order to settle a dispute in regard to certain reserves which had been asked for Agricultural Show Grounds. How they cannot grant lands reserved by the Crown without consulting private individuals who have forceibly taken possession of government land, knowingly, seems strange. Thursday may explain.

BIG BARN RAISINGS, Logging bees, stoning bees, etc., are having a big run. Lots of Turnips. ! ! !

Mr. Wright, from Manitoba, on a visit to some friends here, says that country is improving rapidly.

Land that could have been bought two years ago for $500.00, will now command as many thousands. How am dot for high? By golly, dot ish not so slow.

OSPREY.

From our own Correspondent.

Haying has commenced, and there is scarcely half a crop.

Spring crops are looking well.

There is considerable building going on, Mr. Thos. Gamey is erecting a brick house, and Mr. Jonathin Hickling also.

From the appearance of the crops, and prospect of good markets, there is no reason for discontent or grumbling, but rather the opposite.

DUNDALK.

Hot weather.

DUSTY roads.

BUSINESS quiet.

THE Tannery is progressing.

MR GORDON'S Horse, that got hurt at Flesherton races, has recovered.

AGRICULTURAL meeting here last Tuesday; result Fall Exhibition in Hopeville.

MR. THOS CAUGHLEY is putting two run of stones in his mill for Oat Meal; will also continue two run for gristing Flour.

DURING the months of July and August a weather report will be issued from the Meteorological Office, Toronto. The report is issued for the special benefit of the farming community and will indicate the probable state of the weather during the next twenty four hours. These reports have heretofore been issued at 10 a. m., and have been found to be very reliable. The change in time which has been made for the benefit of the farmers will no doubt be of good service. The report can be seen at office of the Dominion Telegraph office in Wilcox's Jewelry store.

By the timely use of the Extract of Wild Strawberry you may avert all disagreeable summer complaints, diarrhoea, dysentery, cholera morbus, etc., nothing is so pleasant in its cure, so rapid, reliable, and effectual, as Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. And the value of this medicine as an antidote in sour stomach, colic, cramps, seasickness, vomiting, and other irritations of the stomach and bowels is incalculable. It is safe and sure, and should be carried in the haversack of every traveller and tourist.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood, that we do not hold ourselves responsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

SIR,—A few weeks since your correspondent "Observer" called attention to the fact that the recent investigation of the financial affairs of the Glenelg Agricultural Society was after all but a partial affair, as it only extended over the time which Mr. Lyons was purse-bearer.

At the time that investigation was ordered it was silently assumed that the apparent deficiency was solely confined to the time of Mr. Lyons' Treasurership. Whether this was a correct assumption or not time and a further investigation alone can determine. There is no denying the fact that a very general, perhaps not always openly expressed, opinion prevails throughout the community that a further investigation should be instituted.

In view of this fact it is the duty of the Directors without delay to order such further investigation as the nature and exigency of the case demand.

At present there are numerous intelligent and well-to-do farmers in the vicinity of Markdale who ought to be, but who are not members of the Society, and who it is said are kept out because they have no faith in the "management." In order, therefore, to restore public confidence and to satisfy those friends of the Society who have given assistance so generously in the past, it is highly desirable that a further investigation of the accounts of the Society should be had. Of course, if the Directors fail to do their duty in this respect, the next annual meeting will not likely fail to note the fact and apply the needed remedy, viz: A radical change in the Directorate and a thorough investigation.

CISMA.

MARKDALE, June 25, 1881.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

DEAR SIR,—Will you kindly allow me, one of the injured ones, space to reply to the insinuations of an "old maid" whose letter appeared in the STANDARD of June 24th.

This maid of nineteen summers (as she says) is, in my estimation if a maid at all, twice, or perhaps more than twice, nineteen, whose hopes of ever possessing (that boon of all earthly happiness) a man is utterly blighted; therefore, to have satisfaction some way she vents her spite on the nobler sex. I for one hope it will be the means of easing her poor heart. I cannot conceive, my dear sir, how any lady of the tender years of nineteen could use such language towards men or have the experience she relates of the opposite sex. She seems very anxious to have her sentiments brought before the public, and in a way that is intended to prejudice the minds of younger ladies than herself, against the very beings she would give her eye-teeth to possess.

You can't be sure of the sentiments
Of a woman you see in print,
Nor yet be sure of herself for,
She's not as hard as flint.

You's truly,
½ past 3 & Twenty.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

The annual Pic-nic in connection with Zion Sabbath School, Glenelg, was held in Mr. Jack's Grove, on the 22nd inst. The day was fine but considerably cool for the season of the year, consequently the time was not so enjoyable as it otherwise would have been. The eatibles provided by the ladies were all that could be desired; and, after all had partaken heartily, the audience was called to order by Mr. Hunt, who briefely refered to the Sabbath School and its working. Mr. Thos. Cook, Sec., gave for the information and guidance of those concerned an account of moneys expended the standing of pupils, &c. Readings, Recitations and Discourses followed, and were listened to with marked attention.

Our good friend, Mr. Banks, of 2nd Con., Glenelg, entertained the audience at some length, and endeavored to impress upon those present the necessity of united effort in carrying on the Sabbath School. Rev. Jos. Edge brought the intellectual part of the entertainment to a close, by a few happy and suitable remarks, after he had for some time dwelt on the necessity of recreation, and the possibility of suitable enjoyment of an innocent and sinless nature.

"AUDIO."

Glenelg June 28th 1881.

We learn from the Telegraph reports to the Mail that 600 pic-nickers who partook lemonade, on July 4th, at a place called Warrensburg in the state of Mo., were poisoned, caused by acid being put into the mixture. Eight have died and 100 are in a critical condition. The vendor of the stuff has been arrested.

WE have received specimen sheets of Lovell's Business and Professional Directory for the Province of Ontario. It is got up in Mr. Lovell's usual style, and when we say that, no further praise is necessary. A work of this kind is a prodigious undertaking and requires a great amount of business energy and outlay of money, and we sincerely hope Mr. Lovell will receive the united support of the business community of Ontario. Subscription for the work is $5, which, considering the magnitude of the work, we consider is very cheap. For rates of advertising see adv. in another column.

WE learn from the O. S. Advertiser that while the ... was in progress on Dominion Day in that town the clothes of a young lady named Woolrich, who was driving round the grounds with a person named Brock, were ignited by a spark from a cigar which the young man was smoking. As soon as the young lady felt the fire she jumped from the buggy and started to run, and of course was almost immediately enveloped in flames. She was immediately surrounded by some gentlemen and forcibly thrown down, and the flames smothered, but not until her entire clothing was almost completely consumed. She was severely burned, but we are happy to say she is recovering slowly from her injuries.

QUITE a number of the children belonging to the Markdale and Orange Valley Presbyterian S. Schools, their parents, and a number of friends to the good cause gathered at Thompson's Grove, Orange Valley, on July 1st to hold their annual picnic as announced. Old Sol favored us with his appearance that day, and before he had got far on his journey flocks of the small folks could be seen joyously wending their way to the grounds. By noon the pots were singing about "The cosy cup of Tea." S. S. Picnics are always for the amusement of the young and judging from the manner in which the juveniles took part in the swinging, croquet, base ball, and the alimonious part, they put in a staving time. The Teachers did not turn out as well as they should have done, in future we hope such will not be the case.

The ladies of the Congregation fully sustained their reputation, not only for quality but for quantity of eatables. There was also base ball, croquet, and swings, for those who liked such amusements, about 4 o'clock the assembly was called to order and Mr. E. Hicks, the Superintendent of the School called to the chair, after which a very suitable programme was gone through with, consisting of recitations, and dialogues by several of the scholars, all of which were well rendered, while two or three showed really superior talent, then the report by the Sec.-Treas., Mr. John Wiley, showed a good, healthy, financial state Short addresses were given by Mr. Bowes, Markdale, and the two retiring pastors, Revs. Walker and Garnett, the whole interspersed with good singing by the school, after singing the Doxology, the benediction pronounced by the Rev. C. C. Garnett, all took their homeward way, feeling all the better of having met. Proceeds, $23.00

EAST GREY REFORM ASSOCIATION.—An adjourned meeting of East Grey Reform Association was held at Flesherton on Thursday, 28th ult., when the following officers were elected:—President, Jas. Clelland, Meaford; 1st Vice, Thos. Gillilands, Eugenie; 2nd Vice, Mr. Henderson, Flesherton; 3rd Vice, H. Graham, Dundalk; Wm. Brown, Markdale, was re-elected Secretary-Treasurer. The following gentlemen were appointed Conveners of the different Township Associations, each one to be President of the same ex officio, until others are elected:—Artemesia—Thorp Wright, Flesherton P. O. Collingwood Township — Dr. Hunt, Clarksburg P. O. Euphrasia—W. J. Clark, Epping P. O. Holland—John Cameron, Arnott P. O. Osprey—Archibald McIntyre, McIntyre P. O. Proton—Duncan McMillan, Hopeville P. O. St. Vincent and Meaford—Mr. Christie, Meaford P. O.

FASHIONEBLE WEDDING.—We have this week to chronicle another victim to the wiles of Cupid. Mr. A. Dunlop, Baker and Confectioner, becoming disgusted with single blessedness, shuffled off the mortal coil of bachelorhood and became a full-fledged benedict on Thursday night, June 30. The happy man was supported through the trying ordeal by Messrs. George Bloomfield and —— Tait. The blushing bride, Miss Hattie Bloomfield, who looked charming, was supported by Miss Lemon, Owen Sound; Miss Tais, Meaford; and Miss Amelia McFarland. We would give a description of the Ladies' dresses, but although a benedict ourselves, our forte does not lie in that line. The marriage took place at the residence of the bride's father. Mr. and Mrs. Dunlop have our best wishes and we hope their journey through life will be brim full of happiness, and we doubt not it will be, as they did not forget the Printer.

ANOTHER enjoyable affair came off at New England on Wednesday the 22nd ult., when the Zion Primitive Methodist S. S. held their annual anniversary picnic. Though the day was a little chilly, still every body and their wives and sweethearts seemed to enjoy themselves.

THE Annual Pic-Nic of Christ Church Sunday School was held on the 1st inst, in Mr. Walker's grove. The day was all that could be desired, and the attendance was good. From 1 o'clock until four was spent in croquet, swinging, base ball, and singing. In the cool of the evening races and jumping was the order of the day, and the various prizes were keenly contested for, after which the little ones were collected for supper. Judging from the rappid manner in which the good things disappeared, the youngsters evidently thought this the best part of the program. Shortly after 6 o'clock all wended their way homewards apparently well pleased with their afternoon's enjoyment.

"We have just ... a copy of the Electric Age, No. 3 of ... a monthly journal published in the interest of the Science of Electro-Therapeutics, edited by S. Vernoy, 197 Jarvis-street, Toronto. It treats on the cause and cure of diseases by Electricity, the essence of life, health, happiness, &c., supported by authority well calculated to convince the sceptic. This is a branch of science of vast interest to afflicted humanity, and we need all the light and improvement possible—the more the better. The evidence given as proof of the marvellous results is conclusive."

FROM the many reports and rumors that are afloat it is likely that the attempt on President Garfield's life is only the beginning, what the end will be it is impossible to say. Blain has been threatened; the Vice President has been told that should Garfield die he, Arthur, will not be permitted to take his place, and now it is Conklin that is to be slaughtered. Happy country, those United States.

A sad accident occurred near the Sauble on Dominion Day wherby a young man named Wakefield lost his life. He was riding one of his horses to the pasture when the animal bolted throwing him on his head and fractured his skull. He lived about 24 hours, but never was conscious.—O. S. Advertiser.

ACCIDENT.—While gumming a saw a Mr. Moore, of Flesherton, got his skull fractured from the bursting of an Emery wheel which he was using. His injuries though serious are not likely to prove fatal as he is said to be in a fair way to recovery.

WE have recieved No. 2 of the Leader, a new paper in Tara. It is a 24 column, neatly got up, with a good advertising patronage to commence with and is to be independent in politics. We wish our cotem success.

A NEVADA SNAKE STORY.

Probably there is no animal on earth so intelligent and humane as a Nevada rattle snake. A little girl, four years old, belonging to a farmer, who was run away with in the mountains the other day while her father got out of the waggon to get a drink—at the spring. As she was one of twelve daughters, he hated to spoil the set, and so pushed on after her, but with little hopes of overtaking the frightened animal. Presently he found the horse right on the edge of a precipice unable to move one inch. One end of the strap had caught round his fetlock, the other end round a tree and held him tight. When the farmer went to pull on the strap he jumped about ten feet, for a rattle snake was holding the horse. It had wound its tail around the horse's leg, its neck was turned three times round a sapling, and its teeth where fast in the wood. It was twelve feet long, for the farmer measured it, A few pounds more strain would have snapped the snake clear in two. The snake wasn't over five feet long really, for when the farmer took the strain off it came right back to its natural size, for the snake is a very elastic animal. The child wasn't frightened in the least. This story must be true, for the farmer was there and saw it all, and says it is true. He wanted four copies of the paper—the Carson Appeal—if it published the item, to send to his relatives in the East. We take the liberty of extending the information to his acquaintances in the other parts of the country. Those who know him best and admire him most will be glad to hear that he is doing so well out in Nevada.

The Southern papers are full of wonders and freaks of nature. The Louisville Courier-Journal contained recently a marvellous tale about the mother of seven children at a birth, and now we read in a South Carolina paper of a lawyer who charged a fee for his services which his client declared was exorbitant. Finally the lawyer said: "Well, sir, you know me well enough to know that while I do not overcharge my clients, I hold myself professionally bound not to underbid my brethren of the profession. I shall not sue you, for you are my old friend as well as a client, and the matter is left entirely to your own discretion." The next day the client paid the amount he deemed just, and on getting a receipt handed the lawyer a note and departed. The note expressed his thanks and gratitude for the able manner in which his case had been conducted, and along with this note was a handsome amount which he begged his counsel to accept from him as a mark of his esteem, great regard and gratitude. These newspapers must not tax the public credulity too far.

A Minnesota school teacher who was in the habit of making love to his pupils, was sued by one of them for breach of promise. He had been so attentive to so many that he could not remember anything, particularly, which occurred between himself and plaintiff, until she produced a photograph of him in the act of kissing her. In a moment of unusual spooniness she had persuaded him to sit for his picture with the resule mentioned, and the jury found a verdict in her favour.

IMPORTANT DECISION.—The Ontario Minister of Education has just given an important decision. Mr. Lee, a member of the Board of the Toronto Collegiate Institute, had his seat contested on the ground that he could not legally be a trustee and act as secretary and treasurer of the Board, but the Minister has written that there is nothing in the Act of 1881 or any previous Act to disqualify any trustee from holding the position, providing the work is done gratuitously. Mr. Kee has had no remuneration for the work, and he therefore retains his seat.

An organ costing $10,000 has just been placed in the Queen's Avenue Methodist Church at London, and will be heard for the first time next Sunday. It is the best organ in western Ontario.

The proceedings in connection with the extradition of the Feenleys had been completed by one of the constables quitting the gaol and making a formal arrest on the charge of murder. The information is laid by Patrick Donnelly. The next step will be to bring the prisoners before a magistrate, which probably be done this week.

A LITTLE girl called one of her dolls, a jointless creature, her "woman's rights doll." "But why do you call her so?" asked her aunt, a lecturer on that much discussed question. "Oh, 'cause," the child answered, "she's just like you; she can't ever sit down and be comfortable."

The greatest remedy for this, the great, wise and good will tell you, is Hop Bitters—rely on it.—Press.

Spectacles, to suit all sights, at Wilcox the Jewellers.

We noticed on Wednesday, the delivering of three very fine steers to Mr. A. Lyons, cattle dealer, by Mr. John Ford, of Mount Royal Farm. One of the animals was two years old, and the others three. The price paid for them was $125. Such stock is a credit to the raiser, and Mr. F. thinks a decided refutation to the assertion made by one of our village butchers some time since, that he, Mr. F., raised nothing but scrubs.

Travellers and tourists should always be provided with Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, the best remedy in the world for curing suffering brought on for eating unripe or sour fruits, bad milk, impure water, change of water and climate. The great remedy for all summer complaints.

Some contemptible wretch, on Monday last, taking advantage of the absence of her husband to frighten a lady, sent Mrs. McFarland a threatening letter. A reward of $100 has been offered for such information as will lead to the discovery and conviction of the dastard.

The most pleasant, rapid, reliable and effectual remedy yet discovered for diarrhœa, dysentery, cholera morbus, cholera infantum, and all summer complaints, is Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. It is unsurpassed as a reliable specific in the above diseases, is well known as a great remedial agent, and is more highly valued the longer it is known. Travellers and tourists should carry a supply in their haversack. For sale by all Dealers in Medicines.

The Ladies Aid Society in connection with the Methodist Church held a Strawberry and Ice Cream festival in "Fleshers Grove," which was well patronized. The eatibles were served up in good style and were powerfully good. They also held a concert in the evening which was well attended. Proceeds of both combined $60.

Two car loads of Implements, manufactured by Haggartt & Cochrane Brampton and St. Thomas, were shipped to Dundalk two weeks ago, and have all been sold since that time by W. H. McCartee, of Meaford, agent for Grey Co., and still they come. The above machinery is very popular, as the great number of sales effected goes to prove.

Thousands of children are lost annually from cholera infantum, diarrhœa, and the summer complaints, whose lives might be preserved by using Extract of Wild Strawberry. Physicians recommend and use it constantly. It is a remedy well known, and more highly valued the longer known. It is for sale at all drug stores, and is within reach of every one. See advertisements in another column.

A game of Lacrosse in Manitawaning last Tuesday between the club of the place, and Owen Sound club. The Manitawaningites beat in two straight games.

The remedy that has had the most remarkable success in the cure of diarrhœa, dysentery, cholera morbus, and, indeed, every kind of summer complaint, brought on by eating improper food, such as raw vegetables, unripe or sour fruits, bad milk, impure water, etc.,—the remedy that is the most pleasant, rapid, reliable, and effectual, is Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. It is the finest remedy for summer complaints known. For sale by all dealers.

Copies of Testimonials for Dillingham's Thumb & Finger Barley Ford.—Mr. Sidney Dillingham's Patent Thumb and Finger Barley Forks surpass all other Barley Forks that I have seen. It carries the forkful to the load in as compact a form as if it were bound. In a windy day one man can do the work of two. I have ordered four forks for this season, one for each of my farms.—H. Reazin Fenelon.

I have used Mr. Dillingham's Barley Fork and find it to work complete. I had two steel forks, and from the effectual working of this fork, I was induced to buy two of them which work to my entire Satisfaction and can consequently recommend it to all farmers.—W. H. Jewell, Mariposa.

I take much pleasure in recommending Dillingham's Barley Fork, as I firmly believe it has to-day no equal. I used one last Season, and have ordered another for next season. —D. J. McKinnon, Oak Wood.

Having used Mr. Dillingham's Barley Fork, I find it to do its work complete and the very thing designed for loose barley. I have steel forks besides two of Mr. Dillingham's, but prefer the latter to any I have ever seen or used, and highly recommend its utility to the public.—E. Richie, Cambry.

Is a compound of the virtues of sarsaparilla, stillingia, mandrake, yellow dock, with the iodide of potash and iron, all powerful blood-making, blood-cleansing, and life-sustaining elements. It is the purest, safest, and most effectual alterative medicine known or available to the public. The sciences of medicine and chemistry have never produced so valuable a remedy, nor one so potent to cure all diseases resulting from impure blood. It cures Scrofula and all scrofulous diseases, Erysipelas, Rose, or St. Anthony's Fire, Pimples and Face-grubs, Pustules, Blotches, Boils, Tumors, Tetter, Humors, Salt Rheum, Scald-head, Ring-worm, Ulcers, Sores, Rheumatism, Mercurial Disease, Neuralgia, Female Weaknesses and Irregularities, Jaundice, Affections of the Liver, Dyspepsia, Emaciation, and General Debility.

By its searching and cleansing qualities it purges out the foul corruptions which contaminate the blood and cause derangement and decay. It stimulates and enlivens the vital functions, promotes energy and strength, restores and preserves health, and infuses new life and vigor throughout the whole system. No sufferer from any disease which arises from impurity of the blood need despair who will give Ayer's Sarsaparilla a fair trial.

It is folly to experiment with the numerous low-priced mixtures, of cheap materials, and without medicinal virtues, offered as blood-purifiers, while disease becomes more firmly seated. Ayer's Sarsaparilla is a medicine of such concentrated curative power, that it is by far the best, cheapest, and most reliable blood-purifier known. Physicians know its composition, and prescribe it. It has been widely used for forty years, and has won the unqualified confidence of millions whom it has benefited.

A COMMERCIAL BUCCANEER.

THE CAREER OF THE SCHOONER FERRET.

(From the London Times.)

Our Melbourne correspondent gives a connected account of a series of frauds into which a few disjointed telegrams and paragraphs have hitherto only allowed us an occasional glimpse. The name of the ship Ferret will henceforth be made memorable by a bold system of swindling commenced in this country, continued along the route to Australia, and finally cut short in the capital of Victoria. The adventures of Walker and Henderson, or whatever were the real names of these knights of the seas, between the months of October, 1880, and April, 1881, read like a modern revival of the age of piratical enterprise. The depredators are a hybrid between the bold buccaneer of the old-fashioned story-books and the common mercantile swindler who figures at the Old Bailey. The latter strain is, indeed, uppermost in this latest development of civilized robbery. A dash of the romance of the salt sea and a large supply of cool effrontery are the only ingredients which rescue Walker and Henderson's venture from the list of every-day devices recorded in our police reports. It must be acknowledged that the scheme was bold in conception, that it was carefully thought out, and that its execution displayed considerable maritime and mercantile experience.

THE ROMANTIC FERRET.

The owners of the Ferrett, a steamer of 346 tons, were the Highland Railway Company. A stranger coming to Glasgow, giving the name of Walker, and professing to act as broker in behalf of a principal named Smith, chartered the ship from the company, stating, as it appears, that Smith intended to take a six months' yachting cruise for the benefit of his wife's health. What looked like good references were, no doubt, supplied to the company, and also to the ship-chandler from whom Walker obtained ship's stores, including an ample and excellent stock of wine, to the value of £1,490. These goods were paid for by a three months' bill, which was afterwards dishonoured. As soon as the steamer had finished her overhauling in one of the Clyde yards, it was taken down to Cardiff by a temporary crew. At Cardiff a new crew was shipped, and coal was taken on board, and Smith and his invalid wife made their appearance. Thence the ship went to Milford Haven, and from Milford Haven it started on the 1st of last November, ostensibly for Marseilles. The Highland Railway Company, it is needless to say, had not received their charter money, or, if a portion had been paid, had not received the balance. The coals, like the ship's stores, were probably paid for with paper.

THE SINGULAR CONDUCT OF SMITH.

Thus cheaply hired and equipped, the Ferret passed through the Straits of Gibraltar, with Smith, or Henderson as he afterwards called himself, as owner, and Walker as purser. So far, all seemed straightforward. The Ferret was well on its way to Marseilles. Smith and his wife were already beginning to revel in that balmy Mediterranean climate which was to restore Mrs. Smith to health, when a remarkable course of behaviour was adopted by her husband. After passing Gibraltar, and on the same day, the steamer's funnel, previously white, was painted black; and her boats, before blue, became white. The next of Mr. Smith's eccentricities was to turn the ship's course round in the night, and steer back past Gibraltar with lights obscured. Then, when nearly out of the Straits, he caused two boats, some buoys and casks, and other articles, all bearing upon them the name of the Ferret, to be thrown overboard. The man who would escape his creditors for a season leaves a hat and some clothes by the river bank or seashore. The jettison above-mentioned had a somewhat similar object. The sea was credited with another victim, and Smith and Walker pursued their voyage rejoicing. Some of the crew desired to know the reason of these remarkable tactics, and the engineer, in particular, importuned Smith for an explanation. The answer, when at last given to the engineer, and then to the crew, was hardly such as to set suspicion at rest. Smith said that his yachting expedition was to combine profit with pleasure. He was going to trade between Brazilian and other ports. But he was a political exile from the United States, whose lynx-eyed agents were doubtless on the watch to arrest him anywhere and everywhere. Naturally it became necessary that he should double about, change his ship's number and aspect, give the outside world reason to believe she had foundered with all hands, and enter the crew under false names. This somewhat violently improbable explanation was followed by threats to blow out the brains of any man who should be over-communicative, and by promises of handsome remuneration.

"WAS FOR PLUNDER."

On November 21, Cape Verd was reached, stores were taken in, and a bill—fraudulent of course—was given in payment. Leaving Cape Verd the name of the ship was changed to "the Benton." The severance of identity was now complete. The whole world was before the confederates as a field for plunder. They had already settled their plan of campaign. They steered for Santos, where, after some delay, they obtained on freight, by false pretences, a cargo of coffee for Marseilles. Nothing was further from their thoughts than a voyage to Marseilles. They steamed off for Cape Town, and on the way the paint-pot and fitters' tools were again brought into use. The name of the ship was this time changed to "the Iona." Thus rehabilitated, the vessel made Cape Town on January 29, and the coffee which had been obtained for nothing was sold for between £18,000 and £15,000. The next point was Melbourne, ... the steamer was docked and overhauled, the master still probably drawing on an imaginary London firm by way of payment. Mauritius was quitted, and Melbourne was reached on April the 20th.

THE CAPTURE.

At Melbourne the adventurers' career had reached the end of their tether. A vigilant eye noticed the similarity of the vessel, as it entered the docks, to the Ferret as described in the hue and cry raised in various parts of the world by telegraph. A few days' observation strengthened these suspicions, and a search by the Customs authorities proved them to be correct. Smith now become Henderson, his wife and Walker decamped, but the Melbourne police tracked and captured the principal actors, and the invalid lady, whose cruise had been extended so greatly beyond its original limits, surrendered herself. The eyes of the crew were somewhat tardily opened to the character of their employers. They atoned for their simplicity by giving every information at the police court investigation, and they vied in painting Smith and Walker probably even blacker than reality. Thus ends an episode, the final passages of which might suggest a ballad for a water "Policeman X."

A GREAT WINDFALL.

THE SUCCESSOR TO THE LATE EARL OF MAR DISCOVERED AT LONDON ONTARIO.

A dispatch from London, Ontario, makes the following statement: After years of patient searching, and the difficulties which poverty raised, a workman in the car shops in this city has traced up what seems to be an indisputable claim to one of the richest estates in all Scotland. The greatest excitement and interest has been awakened by the romantic history of the man who has thus been elevated into prominence, and there is every probability that he will soon be put in possession of his rights. It will be remembered that some years ago the Earl of Mar died without leaving a direct heir to his immense estate, and by right of succession a nephew Lord Kellie, assumed the the title and property of the dead nobleman, valued at one hundred million dollars.

Now, however, it has been discovered that the Earl had a son, and that son is believed to be John Francis Erskine of this city. The tracing up of the Earl's proofs has necessarily been slow and unsatisfactory, from the fact that Mr. Erskine was poor and hampered by a family, and men who could have helped him doubted his story.

The facts of the case are briefly these; In 1825, two years before the marriage of the Earl to the daughter of Lord Monteith, a child was born to the lady, who afterwards became its legitamate mother by marriage to the father. When an infant the little boy was secretly given into the care of a poor but respectable family whom the Earl paid well for the service rendered. Latter on, when the little one had grown up to five or six years old, he was placed under the care of a man named Campbell and sent to Canada. His guardian frequently told him in latter years that he was the son of one of Scotland's noblest Earls, who should some day be placed in possession of documents that would enable to him go home and live in luxury. The old man seemed under a strong pledge however, not to reveal the parentage of his ward, and although he broke his promise so far as to intimate on many occasion that the young man was the heir to the Earldom of Mar, he never allowed the documentary proof to go out of his hands. He said all would be left in proper shape at his death. A few years ago, however the man died very suddenly without leaving the needed documents for the establishment of his ward's claim to the property of the dead Earl. Later on, however, while excavations were being made in an outhouse on the Campbell homestead, a bottle was found with several letters in it from the Earl of Mar with reference to his son. This seemed to be all the proof necessary, but in addition to that Mr. Erskine has visited Scotland quietly and found the people who had taken care of him when an infant and handed him over to Campbell. The paper held by them, and also those found in the bottle, set forth certain marks by which the heir could always be known, and these the climant undoubtedly bears. His resemblance to the late Earl is so striking, despite the changes which hard work has made, that the friends of the nobleman have no difficulty whatever in identifying Mr. Erskine as his son. Articles of gold and silverware, as well as a ring, the in the presumptive heir's possession, bearing the initials of his mother and father. Leading lawyers in this country and Scotland hold out the strongest encouragement to Mr. Erskine if he can only manage to meet the present occupants of the estate and prove himself the heir at law. Men of Mars are offering to unite in a joint stock company to establish the claim if a bond is given to pay a certain percentage on their investment According to the outlook, Mr. Erskine's working days are over, and his installment as the Earl of Mar remains only a matter which time will quickly bring about. He is being visited by thousands, and his story, as it is learned, awakened the deepest interest everywhere.

Following are copies of the letters found in the bottle:

MR. HUGH CAMPBELL—SIR: I send you the thousand pounds, the clothes, and the child as agreed on, whose name is John Francis Erskine, ...

BY ... AND ...

as he is sickly, and his medical attendant recommends his removal to the fresh air of America; and in order that he may be known I give the marks: One on the side, and on the calf of the left leg there is a mark, and near the left ear; there is a ... in a sight of the left eye, and on the edge of the left hand ... a mark of a diamond. I also send you a gold watch, chain and seals for him and I want you to call him Richard Campbell till further orders.

I have signed, THE EARL OF MAR.

P. S.—When you are to sail for America, call and you will be furnished with everything that will be wanted for the comfort of the child and yourself, and a chest of books that was bought at Mr. Callender's auction for my heir, whose property you shall consider them to be. Dated this day in the of Glasgot first Monday of March, in the year of our Lord one thousand eight hundred and twenty-five. I have signed,

ERSKINE, EARL OF MAR.

We acknowledge that John Francis Erskine is ... the ... I ... on the ... hand ... between the thumb and forefinger, with a mark of a diamond.

(Signed), WILLIAM HAMILTON, JOHN ROSS.

Hamilton, C. W., Feb. 7, 1839.

MR. HUGH CAMPBELL—I am going to Scotland next summer, and in case of death or accident I hereby acknowledge the boy in your care to be John Francis Erskine, the last law at mail heir, of the line of Erskine, Earl of Mar, known at present under the name of and Richard Campbell, and, as I understand, you have allowed the word Callender to be added to him. I consider him to be my sole heir and executor, directing him to pay all my just debts. In testimony, I have set my hand and seal in the year of our Lord, Feb. the 7th, 1839.

Signed, ERSKINE, EARL OF MAR.

Written in our presence and in the presence of each other.

(Signed), WILLIAM HAMILTON, JOHN ROSS.

Quebec, June 8, 1850.

MR. HUGH CAMPBELL—SIR: We regret to inform you that the Earl of Mar is dead, and the only male heir now alive is the boy in your charge, whose right name is John Francis Erskine, Earl of Mar, but known at present as Richard Campbell, to which we understand you have allowed the word Callender to be added. Mar requested you to send him home to his friends, who will take care of him till he is of age, and see him established in his estate which is the estate and Earldom of Mar. For we know that he is the lawful heir.

(Signed), WILLIAM HAMILTON, JOHN ROSS.

The discovery of those letters infused fresh life into the presumptive heir, and he sat to work and collected together all the letters which he then had in his possession. He went to work cautiously, having to climants with an abundance of money to contend, but the success of his researches so greatly strengthened his case that he has placed it in the hands of a legal firm, as already stated, and confidently anticipates success.

THE ABOLITION OF PETTICOATS.

It would appear that the doctrine of woman's emancipation from the trammels of feminine dress, promulgated some time ago with considerable vigor by strong minded ladies in the United States, have recently been enthusiastically adopted by an association of German matrons and maidens, which, under the significant title of Clothing League for the Abolition of Petticoats, recently held its first public meeting in a concert room of the Brunnen Strasse, Berlin. A chairwoman having been duly elected, the proceedings were opened by an eloquent speech setting forth the inconveniences and disadvantages, from a sanitary point of view, of the flowing garments hitherto deemed appropriate wear for civilized females. This discourse pronounced it to be the sacred duty of every member of the association to discard, with the utmost promptitude, such objectionable raiment typical of all the disabilities wrongfully ascribed to woman by her oppressor, man, and to assume in its stead a dualistic form of covering for the legs as well as for the arms. This daring programme of action was heard with acclamations of approval by all present save one, a Frau Peters, who courageously stood up for the denounced petticoat, upon the ground that it was far more becoming than trousers to the female sex. Her protesting voice, however, was drowned in a storm of indignant clamor, and a resolution embodying the sentiments previously enunciated by the Chairwoman passed by an overwhelming majority of the fair leaguers.—London Telegraph.

A correspondent of a French paper, commenting on the number of mysterious disappearances constantly occurring, not only in France, but also in England, starts a curious theory. He maintains that death occasionally is actual dissolution. Persons attacked by this form of disease suffer no previous illness, have no warning of their approaching end, but suddenly cease to exist, and as immediately fade from sight. He asserts that some years ago he actually witnessed this phenomenon. He was out walking with a friend, with whom he was engaged in an interesting discussion on a political question of the day, when instantaneously his companion vanished, and from that hour to to the present time has never reappeared. He has little doubt that many of the missing persons so earnestly searched for by friends and by the police have in like manner vanished into thin air. At the moment of his friend's disappearance a strong sulphurous odor was noticed, but beyond this nothing remained ... The question is, he thinks, worthy of a medical investigation.

THE CREAMERY vs. THE WORK OF FARMERS' WIVES.

The superiority of the creamery system over the usual farm dairy was pointed out by a farmer at the late meeting of the Iowa Improved Stock Breeders' Association. He speaks as follows of the advantages to the farmer's wife:

For thirty years our farmers' wives have been endeavoring to solve this problem, and for thirty years they have failed. They have toiled and drudged at the churn, and the price of butter doled out in trade at the country store has not paid for the toil and drudgery. Still woman's toil proved two things, that a calf raised by hand is as good at a year as a calf that has followed its dam; and secondly, that the runty pig which would have died on corn and water along swelled out to ample proportions when fed on milk. And therefore the shrewd farmer saw that milk must be had for the pig, that the cow must in some way be the centre of his system, that the pig and the calf must be raised, and that the bondage of the wife to the churn must be broken. Hence the unusual favor which the creamery has met in the State wherever railroads have rendered the creameries possible.

The creamery takes away half the drudgery of the farmer's wife. But whilst it removes the drudgery it retains the income—the monthly income—not in store accounts but creamery cheques—good as gold. And the best part of it is that this income is derived from that part of the milk that the farmer can most readily spare. It is a fact not generally known, that for the formation of bone and muscle, skim-milk, buttermilk and whole milk are practically equal.

This monthly income is, therefore, practically clear gain. Having thus received one profit from his cow—a profit fully covering the cost of her yearly keep and interest on the investment—he has in the calf a cheap and an available package in which to condense his grass and hay, straw and cornstalks for shipment to the markets of the world. And this the second great advantage of the creamery.

But if the creamery blesses the farmer's wife in delivering her from the bondage of the churn, it confers an equal favor on the farmer in prying him out of the ruts and compelling him to think. For he now must needs study how to get all the cream from the milk, how to feed his stock to the best advantage, and rising higher, he is, before he is aware, balancing in his mind the merits of rival breeds and different systems of management—in a word, he begins to acquire an education which, though not recognized by the schools, will go farther in fitting him for the business of life than much that has favorable recognition.

CURED OF DRINKING.—"A young friend of mine was cured of an insatiable thirst for liquor, which had so prostrated him that he was unable to do any business. He was entirely cured by the use of Hop Bitters. It allayed all that burning thirst; took away the appetite for liquor, made his nerves steady, and he has remained a sober and steady man for more than two years, and has no desire to return to his cups; I know of a number of, others that have been cured of drinking by it."—From a leading R. R. Official, Chicago, Ill.—Times.

A NEWSPAPER WONDER.

The Railway Journal, an American newspaper, containing the latest intelligence with respect to home and foreign politics, the money market, Congress debates, and the theatrical events is now printed and published daily on the trains running between New York and San Francisco. All the news with which its columns are filled is telegraphed from the different parts of the States to certain stations on the line, collected by the editorial staff travelling on the train, and set up, printed and circulated among the subscribing passengers while the iron horse is persistently traversing the plains, and valleys, crossing rivers, and ascending mountain ranges. Every morning the traveller may have his newspaper served up with his coffee and thus keep himself informed of all that is going on in the wide world during the seven days' journey covering over 3,000 miles of ground. He who pays his subscription at New York, which he can do at the railway ticket office, receives the last copy of his paper on the summit of the Sierra Nevada. The production of a news sheet from a flying printing office at an elevation of some 10,000 feet above the level of the sea is most assuredly a performance worthy of conspicuous record in journalistic annals, and highly creditable to American enterprise.

DANGER! BEWARE! As you value your life, beware of opiates in diarrhoea mixtures. They quell pain, but checking too suddenly, the results is inflammation. DR. FOWLER'S EXTRACT WILD STRAWBERRY, made from the Wild Strawberry plant and other healing vegetables, is nature's own cure for all forms of bowel complaint.

Hobart Pasha said the other day that England's friendship was as important to Turkey as to herself. "The Sultan (he adds) was the head of the Mussul man religion, which extended to the very walls of China and throughout Hindostan. The Turks were a noble race, that with a little consideration would mount to its proper place and prove a good ally in time of need."

A POSITIVE FACT.—It is now established beyond controversy that DR. FOWLER'S EXTRACT OF WILD STRAWBERRY is the most perfect cure for all forms of bowel complaints, including cholera murbus, dysentery, colic, cholera infantum, nausea, canker of the stomach and bowles, piles, etc. Beware of opiates and poisoning drugs, that only check for a time produce inflammation. WILD STRAWBERRY is safe and certain in its effects.

The urgent representations of the Pope's physicians have caused the Cardinals to be consulted whether the Pope shall not leave Rome in the autumn. They replied that such a provisional change of residence would not imply a cessation of the imprisonment. The villa of Duke Grazioll at Frascati has been talked of for the Pope's temporary residence, but nothing has been decided.

A serious difference has arisen between Count Corti, the Italian Ambassador at Constantinople and the Porte, arising out of the disappearance of a young Italian lady, who is said to have entered a Turkish harem, and gone over to Islam. Count Courti has imperatively demanded her surrender, and has, it is stated, declared that if the Porte persists in refusal to order that she shall be restored he will break off all personal intercourse with Assim Pasha.

Husbands are not as exact in their statements as they should be. One of them said that he suffered from cold feet, then looking at his wife, he added, "but they are not mine," leaving the company to suppose that they were his wife's. It was a great consolation when he learned he was to be shot and he said Mohammed was waiting to receive him.

The idea of putting up female candidates in the approaching general election in France is not likely to be carried out. Mlle Maria Derisme, a lady who takes an active part in political affairs, was asked by some ultra-Radical electors to stand for Paris. She has declined on the ground that it would only be a waste of time and trouble, as her election would be sure to be quashed. She hopes, however, that the day will come when women's rights will have been sufficiently recognized by law to enable them to sit in parliment.

Mr. Suter, who was recently carried off by brigands in Greece, says that his captors made up for their lack of morality by their punctilious performance of ecclesiastical ceremonies. They used most profane and blasphemous language; but they were superstitious, and were strict in their religious observances. They fasted the whole of Lent, and celebrated Easter day with great solemnity, their salutations including kisses, which were also bestowed upon the captive. They burned incense, Chanted an Easter hymn, and also crossed themselves before and after meals.

Quite a notable engineering undertaking has just been completed in Russia, in the shape of a long bridge over the Volga, on the Syoran and Orenburg railway, connecting the cities of Syoran, in the Government of simbirsk, with that of Samara. The width of the river is nearly a mile, and as it is liable to the occurrence of heavy spring floods, the piers—of which there are fourteen altogether—had to be built 100 feet above mean water level, the depth of the water being more than fifty feet. The great girders, 364 feet long and twenty feet wide, were all rivetted and put together on the right bank of the river and then floated to their position. The whole cost of the structure, which is regarded as a model of its kind, was 1,000,000 silver roubles.

THE 12TH AT MARKDALE.

THE various lodges composing this district celebrated the anniversary of the Battle of the Boyne at Markdale this year. Vandeleur lodge was the first to put in an appearance, and marched to the lodge room of the home lodge. After a short rest the two lodges went out to meet the lodge from Berkeley. Upon their return the other lodges kept arriving until by 12 the following had reported: Vandeleur, Berkeley, Orange Valley, Eugenia, Flesherton, and Flesherton Station. After dinner they formed into procession and marched to Walker's grove and were addressed by some of the leading members of the institution, after which they returned to town, and the fife and drum bands of the various lodges collected in front of the Revere Hotel, and for a time the air resounded with Boyne Water, Protestant Boys, Rise, Sons of William, and the other tunes so dear to the Orange heart. By 6 o'clock the visitors had all departed, and our village, which had been thronged with about as large a crowd as we ever saw here, had resumed its wonted quietness. Notwithstanding the large number of people collected, everything passed off very quietly and harmoniously, and there were, we are happy to say, very few under the influence of liquor, and those few we were told did not belong to the institution.

THE 12TH IN DUNDALK.

THE Battle of the Boyne was celebrated in Dundalk in a manner which was indeed creditable to those who took part. There were eight lodges in all, two of which were Young Britons. The latter deserve special mention, one lodge belonging to Dundalk, and the other from Osprey, each of which were in full dress, one in Blue and the other in White, and were apparently well drilled to stepping to time with the music. A very appropriate address was given by Rev. A. Potter to about 500, being about half the number who came to Dundalk to spend the day. Another note-worthy circumstance was the absence of disorder and drunkenness, the village being almost depopulated early in the evening, and all quiet after a good day's enjoyment.

MAGISTRATE'S COURT.

BEFORE WILLIAM [illegible] AND [illegible], ESQS., J. P'S.

Thomas W. David, vs. Anne, George, and Henry David.—This was a case brought by the above named plaintiff against the defendants for turning cattle into his crops. On the evidence of several witnesses it was proved that the cattle were turned into a bush used in common by both parties for pasturing and that the cattle could get into plaintiff's fields of themselves, as there was no fence to prevent them from so doing. Case dismissed.

BEFORE WM. BROWN AND A. ELLIOTT, ESQS., J. P's.

Anne David vs. Francis Dring.—This was a case for using abusive language, and we must say that in all our experience we never heard its equal. From the evidence it was proved that one was as bad as the other, and the magistrates dismissed the case, with a reprimand to plaintiff and a caution not to use such language again.

Francis David vs. T. W. David.—This case was for trespass in moving a line fence. Defendant fined $2 and costs, and to pay plaintiff $3 damages, to be paid in ten days; failing in which to be committed to gaol for one month at hard labor.

Anne David vs. T. W. David.—This was a case brought by plaintiff against the defendant for using abusive language. After examining several witnesses who proved that some very disgusting language passed between both parties, the court fined the defendant $10 and costs; to be paid in ten days, or 21 days in gaol at hard labor.

THE BIDULPH TRAGEDY.

The preliminary examination of the Feehleys took place this week at London before Squire Peters. After hearing the evidence of Patrick and William Donnelly, a Mr. McConnell, and the boy Connors, who testified to the fact that the Feehleys had made admissions more or less criminating themselves and the members of the Vigilence Committee, the magistrate committed them to stand their trial, bail being refused.

As far as we can judge the evidence is pretty strong, one of the witnesses, Mr. McConnell, swearing positively, that James Feehly stated he could and would hang thewhole lot of them if he wasguaranteed protection.

THE lunatic that runs the smut machine, in Thornbury has been picking at us for sometime past with a view, no doubt, to get us to notice him, but considering the source from whence it eminates we will treat it with silent contempt.

President Garfield to the time of our going to press is progressing favorable, and the Doctors say if no unfavorable symptons set in that he will be out of danger in a week. The abstemious habits and the strong constitution of the President are greatly in his favor and with God's blessing there is every hope of his ultimate recovery.

Vennor says that July, though probadly entering cool and showery most sections will rapidly merge intosultryness and excessive heat shortly after the forth or fifth of the month. From the 5th to the 10th excessive heat will continue, with frequent and severe storms of winds, hail, and thunder, during which casualties from lightning are much to be fered. Between the 10th and 12th of the month similar atmospheric conditions are likely to continue, with thunder and lightening storms of almost daily occurrense, and hurricane of heated winds. Approaching the 20th, heavy showers accomplished by hail will occur more frdquently, with very sultry and muggy intervals. In the neighborhood of the 21st and 22nd days torrents of rain will likely fall in western Ontario and throughout a large portion of the U. States, while in the western and south-western States in particular cyclones, hurricanes, and most destructive hailstorms are likely to cause widespread havoc and loss of life and property. Unsettled and stormy weather, with intervals of great heat, will occur up to the 25th of the month, after which a decided and cooler change may take place, with cool to cold nights about the 27th and 28th. Hot weather however, will againe set in towards the last day of the month, or the entry of August.

SERIOUS ACCIDENT.—On Monday of last week Mr. Thos. Laughton, farmer of Egremont, was on his way to Durham with a team of horses and wagon and when coming down a hill on the Durham Road, a short distance east of Ryan's Hotel one of the traces became unhitched and Mr. Laughton got out and re-hitched it, but just as he was getting into the wagon again the tongue dropped from the neck-yoke, when the horses became unmanagable and ran away, throwing Mr. L., out at the foot of the hill, badly injured him in the back, from the effects of which he is not expected to recover.—Chronicle.

EIGHT children have died at Baltimore from lock jaw caused by burns recieved from discharging toy Pistols and three others are expected to die.

FLESHERTON.

From our own Correspondent.

I notice in the Advance of the 7th inst., a paragraph in Flesherton items to the "Standard," construed in a manner which was not intended. Far from it, while the Flesherton Hotel is a credit to the place, it is no reason why there is not a good opening for another, which would at least have a tendancy of making them a little more obliging. The same issue has it that Flesherton has a population of 600. That must have been on cost.

A case came before J. W. Armstrong, J. P., John Galbreath plaintiff vs., J. Silley. Defendant was fined $5 and Dominion day.

STRANGE.—According to the Advance of the 7th., a Mr. C. Tenney sent a telegram from Toronto at 8 o'clock a. m. June the 30th to a person living in Flesherton, saying he would be up by the afternoon train, and it so came to pass that Mr. T., arrived in Flesherton Village before the delivery of the telegram. The first train leaves Toronto at 7.30 a. m., did the train wait until 8 for him to dispatch his message, or did he overtake the train perhaps the wrong man came.

I noticed a communication in the Standard July 1st signed "M." His views on the subject I consider sound and Scriptural. I have been watching further discussion on the subject, but I have come to the conclusion that "M" soars to high to be attacked by ordinary men and most ministers. We have arrived at the day when 25c will admit to our social gatherings for church purposes company, that people who think there is no harm in dancing would not like to be found dead within a ball room.

GREEN BAY.

GREEN BAY, July 4.—Our crops look well. We are informed by those who have paid us visits from below that our crops are much ahead of those in the older settled parts of Ontario; this is gratifying to think that much abused Manitoulin is likely to have a bountiful harvest. We believe the crops in our vicinity are ahead of anything on the Island. We notice particularly a heavy piece of meadow owned by R. Somerville, which he expects will yield two tons to the acre. We can assure the readers of the Expositor that we will send all reliable information in regard to our oil discovery. It would not be justice to your readers if I did not mention our bear story. It has been the whole talk for days. A day or two ago some one noticed bruin walking leisurely along one of our roads. The cry was raised, and all left their work to join the chase. The assailing force was mustered in less time than it takes to write it, some came on horse back to win or die. When the onset was made the odds were nine to one. One woman was armed with seven buckshot, and she sincerely wished bruin had these in his carcase. The forces had at their command one gun, several clubs, and twenty-three acres of stones. They hit on the plan of surrounding the bear "like Paddy did the Hessians," wisely coming up in single file. One smart, brave young man came up within a rod of his bearship but he had an inquiring mind and began studying anatomy rather than war. The man with the gun, we are told, was afraid to shoot until the bear began the retreat; when he fired and fairly struck a—a piece of birch bark. Our army is vexed sorely for his bearship escaped unhurt. They are angry enough to fight bears or correspondents so don't tell who wrote this.—Expositor.

PROVIDENCE BAY.

PROVIDENCE BAY, June 29.—Farmers are jubilant over the the very promising indications of a bountiful harvest. The Council are going to repair the Mindemoya bridge immediately. Morrisonia rejoices in another building.

PROVIDENCE BAY, July 2.—New potatoes are quite common around Lake Mindemoya. Messrs. Vincer, Cranston, Smith and others had them on the table two weeks ago. Garden stuff of every kind in plenty.—Expositor.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood, that we do not hold ourselves reponsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

SIR,—A very wide and important subject was opened by your correspondent "M" last week. I don't suppose that many will feel inclined to differ with him as to what is really the Scriptural way of supporting religious objects. I suppose that Pastors and all those who take an interest in raising the revenues of the various denominations are at one in preferring that the money could be got freely, voluntarily, and without the use of any extraneous means, such as those referred to by "M." Still, there is no doubt but there often has been debt wiped out by such means, when to all human appearance the debt would have stuck.

Now, it is just here I think where the point lies. Money is wanted. Two ways of getting hold of the money present themselves. The one way is inducing the people to give for the object in view, and it alone. The other way is to combine some popular amusement or social enjoyment and charge double the actual cost, part of the charge going to the enjoyment, the other for the religious object. By taking the first mentioned way it may seem as if there was no human appearance of accomplishing the object in view. Whereas the other way strikes every one as likely to be popular and successful, and is consequently at once adopted.

The fallacy here is in arriving at a decision on the real strength of human appearance. However much money may be wanted for a certain object might it not be better to wait until the more excellent way was inculcated and could be acted on. If it is a fact that individuals are justified by faith, and by faith alone, may it not be also a fact that the support of the Church is dependent in a great measure on faith. If human appearance is taken for guide, then faith is excluded. But if the best scriptural ways of raising money be only persistently proclaimed and stuck to, then faith is brought into active operation, and, while the way may be often dark and difficult, yet, there is no doubt that in the collective, as in the individual case, light will sooner or later arise in the darkness. The great trouble is that religious bodies should be so ready as they often are to get themselves in debt and then when they feel the trouble the aim too often is to wriggle out of it anyhow. No church need expect to grow in vitality by pandering to mere popularity, even supposing that this popularity should give it a large money support. It seems to me that this is an open sore in the church, and I shall be glad to see what "M" or others have more to say on the matter.

Yours truly,

A SUBSCRIBER.

TEARING UP THE BIBLE.

To the Editor of the STANDARD:

DEAR SIR,—I observed an article headed as above in your issue of July 1st. I confidently expected that some of our learned Divines would have made a reply to this most astounding production of the Rev. Dr. Swingin, of Chicago. They seem to have plenty of time for garden parties, Festivals, Socials and such like, but when the "cloven hoof" dons a ministerial cloak, mounts to the pulpit and with "a mouth speaking great things," tear to pieces the blessed Bible, "the man" of the Christian Council—his Pole star—his guide through life and comfort in death, then it is found that the words of Scripture are verified "they all slumbered and slept." I believe there never was a time when so much money was raised in one way and another for religious purposes as now. Never has there been so many men preaching as now, never so many teaching Sabbath School as now, never in all these eighteen hundred years has religious professors been so eager on dollars and cents as now, and never in all Christian history has there been a time when the church was so sound (spiritually) asleep as now. It is most gratifying to these professors to be able to record the proceeds in dollars of this, that and the other entertainment. But where is the additions "to the church of such as shall be saved" being recorded? Echo answers, Where? I have not time to fully answer this Chicago Dr., nor is it necessary, the article carries its mark along with it. There is falsehood written on its very face. The Mosaic Law dead? Why Mr. Editor there is not a civilized country in the world whose laws are not based upon the Mosaic law. This gentleman wants a "popular" Bible. The Bible never was popular, Christianity is not popular, the Christian is not popular! Our Saviour said "My kingdom is not of this world," and to his followers he said "ye are not of this world, I have chosen you out of the world." Again it is written "come out from among them." The world and christianity—true christianity—have always been at variance, and just as sure as some form of christianity or a church becomes popular, so sure is it that the spirit of the Master is wanting, when the world gets the ascendancy in a church, piety declines. The two cannot prosper together. "What fellowship hath righteousness with unrighteousness," "and what communion hath light with darkness," "and what concord hath Christ with Belial, or "what part hath he that believeth with an infidel? Oh how the infidel would from Bob Ingersoll down to the man who will not so much as put his thoughts into words but "saith in his heart there is no God" how they will chuckle and extol this new accession to their numbers. The very Devils in hell will hold "high carnival" over this apostate production, and will be ready to give him a seat of honor in their assemblies. A few mornings ago I came upon a group of men sitting listening to a man talking to them. The talker was a fearful swearer. I have heard many swearers, but for cool, deliberate, studied swearing, this beat them all. He was a stranger to me. I asked him if he was paid for all this swearing, with another oath he told me that he was not a Bible man. This was his sole excuse. Now he has a mate in this Rev. Dr. Swingen, of Chicago, and I suppose the next time some one speaks to him of the evil of swearing on Scriptural grounds, he will repeat that he is not a Bible man, he is a follower of Dr. Swingen.

But again Swingen says it was "a semi barbarous age," "a horrid epoch." Besides the savage injustice of some of those laws there is much that offends against the refinement of our more civilized times. The language of the Bible is unmistakeably plain, this shows its truth and ought to be an argument in its favor. Would Milton's "Paradise Lost" have been worth reading had it not shown the revolt in Heaven in the most hideous colours. If Byron's works had not been what they are they would not have shown the appalling extent to which sextuality and every vice was encouraged in the Courts of Europe in the age of which he wrote. Burns' Jolly Beggars would not have been Jolly Beggars at all if it had been clothed in language such as would suit this Rev. Dr. So with the Bible to record faithfully the doings of the people under the various dispensations, if we may so call them, recorded in the Old Testament. It was necessary to tell what by God, by his people, and also by the Heathen nations surrounding the "chosen seed" Mr. Swingen need not feign to be so much shocked by reading the Bible. If there be a Pandemonium on earth, I am told Chicago is that spot. We might defy this Dr. to point to a single passage in the whole of the Bible that is not eclipsed by every day life in the eighteen hundred and eighty-first year of grace. Every day in our refined Canada we read or Court trials where the evidence given in public court "unfit for publication." The Old Testament extends over 4000 years and I am bold enough to say that the history embraced in that long period has been a thousand times repeated in the Christian era, and our own beloved Ontario a history more "horrid" and "barbarous" may be written every five years. What crime is there recorded in the Bible which we have not had exposed to public gaze, even at our own doors within the short space just mentioned.

We conclude by stating our solemn conviction that if this Rev. Dr. would, like Paul, seek only to preach Christ and him crucified, the Bible would no longer be a stumbling-block to him, nor would he seek to make it popular by tearing it to pieces.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

DEAR SIR,—I see by the Flesherton Advance that "Ratepayer" is still glorying in the shame of the Council, and holds to his old peculiarity of cutting his antagonist down to his own contemptible and sycophant level,—He frowns at your valuable paper for bringing before the public the present state of affairs. He never seems to look back to the time when he could not get the local papers to publish his rubbish, and to gratify his evil desires carried the township printing to Owen Sound; but those days are passed, as he encourages a paper to our village that will be obliged to publish whatever he chooses to write, or go down. They should be consolidated and they might obtain a patent for their smut machine; the one could generate the smut, and the other could scatter it abroad. He accuses me of ignorance, and ridicules what he is pleased to call my scribling; I should judge from his braying that he is an educated ass. But back to the question. Since the last communication I wrote you, Mr. Editor, I see that there is a stir amongst our pub servants. I see from the minutes of the last Council meeting that a motion was carried to cause a mandamus to be issued to compell the County Council to repair the gravel roads, or show cause why they should not; down right shame to the Reeve and Deputy Reeve, after their being at the head of the two Councils for so long a time. But they have a dispute as to which corporation should do the repairs.—They go to the County Council and do very little else but quarrel and squabble. Why should not Artemesia assume her own gravel roads repairs? If she has more roads than the other townships so much the better. What right has Osprey or Proton to contribute towards repairs of the gravel roads in Artemesia. Better by half assume the repairs and quit quarreling, and stop the money that would come to Artemesia going to other townships; but "Rate-payer cannot see through it. He made a mistake the first time in saying anythin about the quarrel, he covers it up last time about as well as they are fixing the roads—a lick and a promise. The old swail crossing got a bit of gravel put on it, but no drain opened, consequently the water backs up and makes the place very deep and soft, and the old rotten logs keep giving way and the gravel put on all goes to waste; but it cannot be fixed. Nevertheless there can be good roads on the town line between Euphrasia and Artemesia and to Markdale, and heavy expense for arbitration, while our leading road is so narrow that few teams like to cross the swail bridge, the logs are so broken off at the end; and $2,000 in the band! and could not give a grant to make a road to the station. What have the people to do with the Council? They elect them as proper men to look after their interests. Go on and do your duty, there are sensible men in the township, and if you do happen to be with the majority it does not prove that you are in right. If you do not do your duty it is more than probable you will find yourselves in the minority at the next election. I would like "Ratepayer" to show me where the $1,000 was spent the past year on special requirements. I notice I gave the Reeve too much credit when I said $150. I take that back. I always like to give the benefit of the doubt and not make the Reeve appear too small. But back to my wee bridge that the people of Tyrone came to see. The architecture of, and the endless expense of iron, where the very best cedar was in abundance and would have made a better bridge for half the cost, the bridge is now impassible, and many more things, if I am forced to scribble again, I will tell the public where the chairman of the finance committee found a smart boy to help them to amend the railway by-law.

CORRESPONDENT AND RATEPAYER.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

SIR,—I see in your last weeks issue a correspondence over the signature of "Cisma," complaining that the late investigation into the Treasurer of the Agricultural Society's Books was not satisfactory, in that it did not extend over the time of the previous Treasurer's term of office, and suggesting that an another investigation should be be instituted for the purpose of going over the books while I was Treasurer. Of course being the only Treasurer the society ever had besides Mr. Lyons, this is directed at me. If your correspondent is manly enough to come to me, or come out over his own signature, and not meanly shield himself behind an alias—the cloak of all cowards—I shall be happy to afford him or any other respectable member of the Society any information I can, so as to set their minds at rest; but so long as it is done in the spirit of treachery and meanness that this is, as evidenced by his base insinuations, and then the moral cowardice of not giving his real name, I shall consider it beneath me to take any notice of it.

BETTER YET.

On a Canadian Southern train the other day a Detroiter had a seat behind a couple who got on at a little station near St Thomas, and he thought he had seen the man's face. before He was looking at him sharply and trying to remembr where he had met him, when the man turned and asked:

"Aren't you Thomas———, of Detroit?"

"Yes; and aren't you William———, of Buffalo?"

"Yes."

"I thought so when you come in. And ain't you running away with old Judge Black's daughter of St. Thomas?"

I've got a better thing than that," whispered William as he leaned over the seat. "I'm running away with his wife."—M. Quad.

"I threw this off in ten minutes," softly said the poet, placing a manuscript on the editorial table. The editor said that when it came to speed, no long haired poet should distance him; and he threw it off in less than ten seconds—off the table into the waste basket.

The Paris Voltaire relates a fresh attempt to assassinate the Czar. It states that a short time ago the Czar was about to step into his bath, when he thought that the water had a bluish tint, which could not be produced by the medicated salts and perfumes which are always thrown into it. Being surprised at this, he immediately sent for the servant who had prepared the bath, and questioned him about the unusual color of the water. The man was embarrassed for an answer, and when ordered to get into the bath himself he refused to do so. On this the Czar had him placed in it by force, the result being the death of the man a few hours later from the effects of the immersion. The analysis of the water proved that it contained the most pernicious ingredients.

The condition of the Jews in Russia is improving somewhat. In one village in the district of Kieff the peasants have voluntarily compensated the Jews to the extent of 800 roubles for the loss they have suffered, the amount of money, though insignificant, being evidence of a return of humane feeling. Good effect is also expected from orders given by the Metropolitans of Moscow and Kieff to the clergy of those districts to preach against the persecution of the Jews.

Here is a story for those little boys who have a mind to run away with the circus. Leotard Carlo was made a performer in the ring when he was only two years old, beginning as a posturant for riders, and afterwards becoming expert on the trapeze. He wore the brightest of spangled costumes, smiled industriously while at work, and altogether was an object of envy to juvenile spectators. A few days ago a pitiably ragged and wan lad of twelve was caught stealing a drink of milk from a can in one of our city streets. Being arrested, he said he was Leotard Carlo, that lameness had incapacitated him from gymnastic feats, and that for months he had been a starving, shelterless tramp.

A Missouri woman got up before daylight last Sunday morning, put on a big washing, hoed the potatoes, killed and dressed three chickens for dinner, beat a neighbor woman out of a dollar on a bet as to the weight of one of the fowls, licked her husband for interfering, picked a gallon of gooseberries and washed and dressed seven children for Sunday School. This may be considered as high proof enterprise.

LINDSAY, July 12.—Shortly after the return of an excursion train on the Victoria Railroad at a late hour last night, fire was noticed in the interior of one of the coaches, caused by a spark from the engine passing through the open door and and lighting in the upholstering. Through the exertions of the fire brigade and some of the railroad employees the fire was confined to the one coach.

A drowning accident occurred at Owen Sound on the morning of the 11th inst at an early hour. A young girl, daughter of Mrs. Wilkins, who resides on the bank of the river, went in bathing and got into deep water. Her mother, hearing her cries for help, rushed into the water to save her child, who had then sunk, and would have been drowned also but for the timely arrival of Mr. J. Douglas who succeeded in getting her ashore. The body of the girl was recovered in a short time, but not before life was extinct. Coroner Cameron was notified, but considered an inquest not necessary.

Engagement and Wedding Rings, in great variety, at Wilcox's the Jewellers.

On the evening of the 6th inst., a little daughter, of Mr. J. B. Cuttle of Orangeville Gazette, aged about two years accidentally fell into a tub of water and was drowned.

Use "Castorine" Machine Oil, for all kinds of machinery, it is also excellent for harness and leather, making it water and weather proof. For sale by dealers.

Attempted Suicide.—Mrs. Wilkins, Owen Sound the mother of the girl who was drowned on the 11th inst., tried to commit suicide by jumping into the river, having a stone attached to her neck. She was rescued by Peter Wilson who happened to be at hand, before she had accomplished her purpose. It is supposed that grief for the loss of her daughter lead to the rash act.

Rev. Mr. Spurgeon's Home.—He lives at Palace Station, seven miles south from the centre of the city. A little over a mile in a cab brought me to the house. It is a delightful situated a piece of ten acres, sloping towards the south. Mr. S. showed me the fernery, the flowers and the garden. Then we went to the stable; and as he opened the door, Mr. S. said: "There, you may eat your dinner off any part of the stable you please, it is so clean." Nor was the praise extravagant; the straw in the stalls had, at its outer edge, a narrow rim of straw matting, so that, in a sense, it might be said that the stalls were carpeted. Over two of the stalls were the names of the occupants, "Brownie" and "Beauty." Mr. Spurgeon said: "My horses are under the law. They observe Saturday. On the day, they are never taken out, no matter who wants to go any where. So that when they carry me to town on Sunday, their Sabbath is not interfered with."

PERSONAL.

Messrs. F. Beatty and Roderick McKenzie, two young men of Artemesia, left Markdale on the 12th inst. bound for Montana.

We have received papers from Mr. W. J. McFarland in Liverpool. We are glad to be able to state that he (Mc) is in good spirits after his voyage.

Ayer's Hair Vigor,

FOR RESTORING GRAY HAIR TO ITS NATURAL VITALITY AND COLOR.

It is a most agreeable dressing, which is at once harmless and effectual, for preserving the hair. It restores, with the gloss and freshness of youth, faded or gray, light, and red hair, to a rich brown, or deep black, as may be desired. By its use thin hair is thickened, and baldness often though not always cured. It checks falling of the hair immediately, and causes a new growth in all cases where the glands are not decayed; while to brashy, weak, or otherwise diseased hair, it imparts vitality and strength, and renders it pliable.

The Vigor cleanses the scalp, cures and prevents the formation of dandruff; and, by its cooling, stimulating, and soothing properties, it heals most if not all of the humors and diseases peculiar to the scalp, keeping it cool, clean, and soft, under which conditions diseases of the scalp and hair are impossible.

As a Dressing for Ladies' Hair

The Vigor is incomparable. It is colorless, contains neither oil nor dye, and will not soil white cambric. It imparts an agreeable and lasting perfume, and as an article for the toilet it is economical and unsurpassed in its excellence.

PRIVATE MONEY!

To invest on very reasonable terms, and at 7 per cent. interest. This is a rare chance and the amount is limited. As many English and Scotch capitalists are withdrawing their capital from the market, I believe a change in the money market may soon be expected. Money has reached rock bottom. Now is the time to borrow, and the place is

HOW HE CAUGHT THEM.

A celebrated and somewhat eccentric preacher in London, played a little trick on his people in order to get them to come to church early. They had been in the habit of coming whenever it suited them, thereby causing him much annoyance. This minister on Sunday told his people that he would, on the next Sunday, have something of unusual importance to communicate to them, but that in order to avail themselves of the benefits of it they must all be in their seats at the very moment appointed for beginning the service. It turned out that all he had to communicate was the expression of his pleasure at finding them all in their seats in season. Only two persons were late, and the others grinned at them as they came in on tip-toe, and took their seats. It was the impression of most of those who were thus lured into a spasmodic punctuality, that the minister had sold them very cheap.

LIVER WOUNDS.

[From the Rochester Democrat.]

The works on surgery generally set down gunshot wounds through the liver as exceedingly dangerous. The Surgical History of the war of the Rebellion, by Surgeon General Barnes, gives the statistics of such wounds, which show a good percentage of recoveries. The Surgeon General writes: "In fifty-nine cases the injury to the liver was the dominant lesion, and the cases in this group may be termed uncomplicated cases." Of the fifty-nine cases, twenty-five had a favorable result. The danger of wounds of the liver were first, primary hemorrhage, and afterward traumatic peritonitis, or abscess of the hepatic parenchyma. Reports by the surgeons attending President Garfield do not indicate the exact nature of the wound. It is probable that it is not yet fully known; but it is believed that the liver is shot through. The surgical history says that gun shot wounds at short range are more lacerated than at long range. The pistol of the assassin carried a bullett as large as a musket ball, and its execution must have been terrible. Complicated cases of shot wounds through the liver are such as are associated with fractures of ribs, lesions of the lung, of the diaphragm, stomach, hepatic ducts or gall bladder, of the spleen, pancreas, kidneys, or blood vessels. Of one hundred and fourteen cases of complicated wounds of the liver, thirty-seven cases are recorded by the Surgeon General as having recovered. This per cent., even, is encouraging to the anxious people who are watching every sign reported from the bedside of the suffering President. The great danger is now undoubtedly from peritonitis or abscess. The impact of a bullet at short range causes a stellate fracture of the liver. This is owing to the outer surface being harder than the inner. Such fractures are very serious.

THE MAN WHO WAS MIXED.

"Really, but I hope you will excuse the intrusion," said a shabby-looking man as an insurance agent looked up.

"You are excusable, Sir. What did you wish?

"Well, you see—I'm a bit mixed. Was it Napoleon or Washington who crossed the Alps?"

"Napoleon, [illegible]?"

"Just so—thanks. I was inclined that way myself, but yet I know that Washington was always scooting around and he might have taken it into his head to cross the Alps. Good day, sir."

He passed down the hall thirty feet, and then turned and protested.

"Say, don't think ill of me, but I am still mixed up—dreadfuly mixed. Will you answer me one more question?"

"Yes."

"Wasn't it Nero who commanded the sun to stand still?"

"No, [illegible]."

"I had an idea that it was Joshua, but I didn't dare put up money on it. Nero was always fiddling around, you know, and I had a dim idea that he might have taken a whack at the sun. Very much obliged to you, Sir."

This time he went half way down stairs and returned on tip-toe. The agent looked up and saw him in the door and sharply quered?

"Well?"

"Mixed again!" pleaded the stranger, "Say, I want to ask you just one more question."

"Yes."

"Did you ever lend a man a dollar to help him on his way to Columbus to see his dying wife?"

"Never! You are thinking of old Diogenes. He used to shell out to every dead-beat who came along."

"Mixed again, by thunder!" muttered the man, and as he passed down stairs he took great pains to set his feet down on each step like a man who had bet on three of a kind and found a flush taking his money.—M. Quad.

WICKED FOR CLERGYMEN.—REV.—, Washington, D. C., writes: I believe it to be all wrong and even wicked for clergymen or other public men to be led into giving testimonials to quack doctors or vile stuffs called medicines, but when a really meritorious article made of valuable remedies known to all, that all physicians use and trust in daily, we should freely commend it. I therefore cheerfully and heartily commend Hop Bitters for the good they have done me and my friends, firmly believing they have no equal for family use. I will not be without them."—New York Baptist Weekly.

A young girl in Dortmund, Germany, robbed her lover of a valuable watch, which she pawned. The young man having missed the watch, notified the police, who traced the theft to the girl. When brought to trial she avowed her guilt with many tears and sobs, alleging that, unable to purchase her wedding dress, and being ashamed to confess her poverty to her future husband, she had purloined his watch with the object of realizing a sufficient amount by its hypothecation to equip herself decently. It is pleasant to know that this piteous confession was responded to in a gallant and magnanimous spirit by the despoiled bridegroom, who declared that "the prisoner was and ever would be his only love, and that he would marry her out of hand if the judge would consent to set her at liberty." Without a moment's delay, the tribunal annulled the arraignment, and the generous lover carried off his [illegible] triumph.

As I do not pursue the course of some of our windy Merchants of our neighboring Villages, of sending out numerous samples of cheap trash (with unscrupolous recommendations) outside our natural business relations, in order to impress the public that they are not properly treated by their more honorable dealers, and draw custom from the many.
You will find everything that I sell just as I represent it, and as good value as you can possibly get for your money anywhere, as I have always held that honorable dealing is the only true course for a business man.
My Groceries are all bought for strictly nett cash, consequently I can and will sell at

VIOLA'S REVENGE.

By the Author of "My Lady's Secret," "A Waif's Fortune," "The Lady of Gordon Lea," &c.

CHAPTER I.

A shattered stone column, a headless marble Apollo, a fountain which once was fed from a pool high up on yonder hillside, but which ceased to play five hundred years ago. In the shadow of the idle fountain a girl sleeping.

It was very hot up there, although there was a gentle breeze from the cool waters of the bay. It was not an English sky, or an English seascape. Both were intensely, beautifully blue. But he who climbed the narrow winding path and halted by the broken column to wipe his heated brow was an Englishman, every inch of him; English in his breadth of chest and spareness of flank, and lean, but muscular, length of limb; Anglo-Saxon in the sunny gold of his hair and the colour of his eyes, which were blue as the sky or the shifting waters of the bay; Briton in the mingled energy, audacity, and folly of this climbing excursion, undertaken at an hour when the olive-hued sons and daughters of the soil were taking their siesta.

Eugh—how hot it was!

He looked toward the idle fountain, longing for the music of the merry waters leaping and plashing in the basin; but he saw only the skirt of a robe and a bare protruding foot, whiter, daintier, of more exquisite symmetry than that of the headless Apollo. A dozen paces, and he got a clear view of the sleeper who dozed in the shade.

An Italian girl, that was evident, with a sweet face, child-like and innocent, regular features delicately chiselled, raven hair, and long eyelashes under beautifully arched brows—a lovely face, in truth, were it not for the sallowness of the complexion.

The young Englishman's eyes rested upon her approvingly, from the crown of her small shapely head, pillowed upon wild flowers and tangled weeds, to the sole of her bare white foot, and he saw no blemish in this Southern maiden. But this was a land of handsome women; her immature beauty interested him less than that which lay in her lap, a branch of purple grapes.

Purple grapes; and he with tongue parched with thirst! No matter what might be the penalty, he must put forth his hand to take and eat. They belonged to a poorly clad Italian damsel and purple grapes were as plentiful as English blackberries in autumn.

The Englishman coolly seated himself beside the sleeper and demolished them one by one until nothing was left but the stalk. Then he took a piece of gold from his pocket and flung it carelessly into the girl's lap, and turned to go; but a stone tripped him up, and he fell, not without noise, over the shattered column, and lay, as he fell, silent and hidden; for the sleeper, aroused, was rubbing her eyes and lifting her little head from the wild flowers and weeds.

"Per Baccho!" said the girl in the musical Italian tongue. "Behold a marvel! Surely one of the Gods has descended, and has eaten my grapes and paid me for them in gold! Which would it be, I wonder? When the earth was young, and his exchequer was full, perhaps—for the English had not stolen all his wealth—Jupiter visited Danae in a shower of such pieces as this. Poor old Jupiter, no longer king of gods and man! Perhaps he has sold his chariot, and is reduced to ramble afoot, feeling hunger and thirst, and paying for his entertainments. For a bunch of grapes, a piece of gold! Verily he pays like a god!"

"Or like one of the English who stole his wealth."

The girl started at the sound, and, with a quick movement, hid that dainty blue-veined foot beneath the skirt of her shabby dress.

Her voice trembled as she replied, but only with the laughter she was endeavoring to suppress.

"'Vox et praterea nihil' Yes, surely it is a god!" she said. "But the god speaks the Italian with a barbarous English accent. Sir Englishman, come forth."

"To confess myself a thief?" said the stranger rising.

"Nay; but to acknowledge, like a courteous guest, the hospitality you have received from a daughter of the land."

And again through the girl's musical tones was heard the shaking of laughter suppressed. Her great lustrous eyes, deep fringed, were bright with welcome, and with a glad pride in the height and strength, the gracious majest of presence, and the fair Saxon comeliness of this freebooting visitor; for she, self-styled a daughter of the land, was English also, though her beauty was that of her Italian mother, and had developed thus far under sunny Southern skies.

"And who taught you Latin, little one?" he asked, as he threw himself at her feet upon the wild flowers and tangled weeds, and forgot the sallowness of her complexion, looking into the deep-fringed eyes and noting how like a row of pearls in a setting of coral were the little teeth he saw between parted lips. He was no longer in haste to go. Here, in the shade of the fountain, he might spend idly and deliciously an hour of his life, its restlessness subdued for a while.

"A father learned and holy, of the monastery yonder," she replied. "He taught me to read the grand old poets who wrote when the earth was young. Of them all, I love Lucretius best."

"Child, you are quite a blue-stocking."

Putting his bantering thought into the strange tongue in which they were speaking, he translated literally. Her dark eyes flashed angrily, and were lowered for one instant to make sure that the little bare foot was securely hidden.

"I do not understand—I do not wish to understand," she cried, shaking her lap, so that the coin he had dropped there was thrown out, and rolled to his feet, where it lay unheeded. "Take your gold and go."

"But," he began, half amused, half dismayed.

"Go," she cried again, enforcing the command with an imperious gesture.

This child-woman of fifteen, whose childhood was revealed in the tender innocence of her sweet face and whose womanhood was displayed in the precocious development of figure characteristic of the hot south, had suddenly assumed the tone and manner of an outraged queen.

"In my country," said the young Englishman persuasively, "blue-stocking is a name applied to a woman distinguished by unusual learning. I ought to have remembered that an idiomatic expression——"

He did not complete the semi-apology. A sudden change of gesture told him that she had repented her displeasure.

"I am not a blue-stocking," she said adopting in her penitence, the term which had offended her. "I am only a poor little Italian girl, just able, thanks to the good fathers, to read the books they lend me from their great library, to sing the songs old Spemio has taught me, and to play upon the organ a few of the tunes he loves best."

"She who can read and write, and who has access to a great library, may become the wisest woman in the world."

"But I am lazy—so lazy, you would not believe!"—and a whimsical uplifting of elbows gave expression to the words.

"Then you have my hearty sympathy," returned the young man, stretching himself indolently upon the green carpet whereon he lay. "Looking back upon the score of years I have spent in this wicked world, I seem to have been incessantly grinding upon the intellectual treadmill; and I am weary of the toil. Yours is the wiser part, little one, to bask in the sun and slumber in the shade, to play with the children and listen to the old wives' tales, to eat the purple grapes, to drink the red wine, to thrive, almost as the flowers thrive, upon pure air and sunshine, needing in addition only the handful of macaroni that would not, in England, keep life in a beggar's dog. Yours is the poetry of existence, and mine the prose."

"Words—idle words!" said the girl. "Would such poetry content you, even for one week?"

"Frankly, I do not know. I am blissfully content at this instant; but I question whether the pure air and sunshine are alone responsible for my frame of mind. It will last until you leave me, or bid me go once more."

"Would you obey?"

"Yes; unless the command were issued in some spirit of misapprehension."

"Then you may remain until—until you are weary of the society of a poor and ignorant girl like me."

"Poverty and ignorance are relative, compared with men I know; and very poor for my station."

"What is your name?"

"Claude Armidale," answered the young man, after an instant's hesitation. "Will you tell me yours?"

"Viola."

The name was very musical in the liquid Italian accent, and the girl looked very beautiful in the slight embarrassment caused by indecision whether or not to reveal a surname which might betray the secret of her nationality. It was excellent fun, she thought, to masquerade as a peasant-girl.

Perhaps there was in her heart a spice of female vanity, which made regret that the shabby dress she wore was so thoroughly in keeping with the character, and of female pride, which forbade a confession which, by exciting surprise, would call attention to her toilet. Therefore she answered only—"Viola."

"It is worthy of you," said Lord Claude Armidale—for he too had a motive for concealment.

The tone was low and earnest; the impulsive words were not an idle compliment. Looking into his blue eyes, she read there "confirmations strong as proofs of Holy Writ;" and for the first time during the interview Viola blushed. It was long before she met his glance again, and in the place of the old fearless frankness had come a new delicious trouble, a strange intense pleasure that was almost pain.

Nevertheless they sat there, talking in gentle murmurs, while at times there were long silent interludes that were more eloquent by far than speech.

What they said to each other, and how they said it—with what tender inflections of the voice, with what glances, burning or shy—Who shall tell? But they talked, those two, until the cool night-breeze blew in from the sea, until Viola shivered in the shade, until Lord Armidale remembered that "Nature abhors a vacuum," and that he had not yet dined. Then they clasped hands and parted, with formal gravity, but with a mutual promise that on the morrow they would meet again.

CHAPTER II.

"To-morrow night, when the moon shall have risen." That was the last appointment made by Claude, Lord Armidale, and Viola. One of them was sitting at the foot of the headless Apollo keeping it.

She might have been taken for a statue herself, so still was she, with the quietude of perfect happiness.

It seemed a long fifteen minutes since she glided like a ghost round the idle fountain to keep tryst in the moonlight—a long fifteen minutes! And in all that time she had stirred but once. Then she had thrown out her arms toward the path by which he would come, and had whispered something to the zephyr that was toying with the hair upon her brow.

It was wondrously calm up there, the silence intensified, rather than broken, by an occasional murmur from the village or the barking of the herdsman's dog.

Below, the moonlight shimmered upon the waters of the bay, and the white-sailed feluces looked like a painted ship upon a painted sea. Above, golden lights, dimmed by the outer splendor, were twinkling in the windows of the monastery. The silent watcher, sitting at the foot of the Apollo, drinking in the beauty of her surroundings, wondered whether Heaven itself could be more fair.

The place was Heaven to her. Her love was holy—all the guilelessness of her young soul was in it, as well as all the strength. There was passion too; but as yet the passion had not been stirred, as yet hers was an early phase of the religion of love—a phase of blind, speechless adoration—a silent rapture.

Hark! A plunging stone kicked from its place in the winding upward path—a quick, firm step—an emerging figure, tall, graceful, yet majestic withal.

"Oh, Claude, Claude, my love!"

There was no prudish reticence about this Italian maid. The first shy sweet sense of shame no longer availed to withhold her from his embrace. Her arms were thrown about his neck, her head was pillowed upon his breast. Every line of her pale eloquent features were aglow with love, but likewise with saintly stainless purity; and, as he looked upon her and thought of the proposal he was about to force his lips to utter, he was ashamed.

"You are late, my Claude?"

"As befits the bearer of bad news, darling. I am summoned to England in hot haste. To-morrow morning, at daybreak, I must go."

There was a wail of dismay, an almost painful tightening of clinging arms.

"But you will return?" she cried.

"Dearest, I do not know."

"Claude, take me with you."

She had not meant that such a prayer should come from her; but in that supreme moment she had no thought of maidenly reserve. That belonged to the time of her security, to the moments when, waiting in the moonlight, she wondered in what words this English gentleman, so young, but of so grand a presence, would ask her to become his wife. She had pictured his delight when she should answer him in his own tongue with the revelation that she was no Italian peasant girl, but English and well-born, though poor.

Such had been the musings which had kept her patient under the delay; but she forgot them now.

"Claude, take me with you!" she cried; and he, knowing that he intended to exert all his influence, all his powers of persuasion, to this end, was so astounded at the simplification of anticipated difficulty that he fenced with the demand.

"Do you love me well enough, little one?"

She did not answer the needless question in words, but nestled closer, as though that were ample response.

"Presently," she said, "you shall come with me to our cottage on the hill-side yonder, and I will tell my father how we love one another, and will ask him to let you take me away. He will be astonished at first, and a little angry perhaps; but I always get my own way in the end. Early in the morning the good fathers of the monastery will make us man and wife; then I will follow you, if need be, to the end of the world, Claude, my beloved."

"Man and wife"—he almost groaned at the words. "I will follow you to the end of the world"—ay, like strolling players or itinerant musicians. He thought of the absurdity of the proposition, pictured his "wife" forsooth, presiding at a dinner-party or holding a reception in a London drawing-room. To the proud spirit of Lord Armidale, such a mesalliance appeared as impossible as it would have done to a prince of the blood. And yet his better self felt all the pathos of that declaration—"I will follow you, if need be, to the end of the world, Claude, my beloved."

"Viola," he said, "you know me simply as a poor English gentleman. The poverty remains, but I am, in truth, a great English lord."

"Yes," answered the girl simply.

The revelation was not a startling surprise to her; she had one to make shortly of equal force.

He was noble and grand enough to be a prince, she thought; but his confession suggested no disparity of station. Even when she had run barefooted amongst the courteous Italian peasants, ragged and shabby as they, she had been to them as a king's daughter—a princess in disguise, the excellent, the illustrious one—loved the more dearly for her condescension when she drank of their thin wine and ate their macaroni, but respected not one wit the less.

"Our manners and customs forbid that I should marry you," he continued. "You would not be happy in discharging the duties which would devolve upon you. Nay, to do so would be impossible; for such task requires a special education amongst surroundings other than these, dear child. Come with me as my companion, but not as my wife."

He found courage to look at her as he spoke the words, and he knew that she was only beginning to comprehend.

That she could not be his wife she understood; and the terrible agony, the frozen, dumb despair of her wan features touched him keenly; for he loved her, this Italian peasant-maid, as he never hoped to love a woman of his own caste. He forgot all about dinner-parties and drawing-rooms, and what society would say of its new acquisition if she became Lady Armidale.

At that moment he would have been more than content to make her his wife had the obstacles been such considerations alone. But there were some things he could not forget—the mortgages on his broad acres, to wit—the load of debt which grew heavier every year—the imperative necessity that he should marry a woman rich enough to redeem the acres his ... loved.

"I am an English lord," he repeated, "and I have great estates; but they are so burdened with debt that, when the yearly charges have been paid, the merest pittance is left—a bare thousand pounds a year, not more. When I marry, it must be some rich woman who can free them from all encumbrances."

What did he mean? the girl was wondering. What did he mean with his talk of poverty and of a "pittance" of a thousand a year? Why, her father had but a hundred pounds per annum, which came to him in quarterly instalments from beyond the seas, and he was accounted rich by the villagers, and was respected for his wealth as well as for his rank! Her thoughts were a horrible whirl and confusion of ideas; but in the chaos two cruel truths began to take shape and consistency. He had been befooling her all this time by his profession of love; he was trying to befool her now by his profession of poverty.

TWO-AND-A-HALF-DOLLAR CHRISTIANS.

There are a great many people in their religons that remind me of "Uncle Phil," a pious old darkey of the old times in Texas. Well, Phil was a fervent Christian with a great gift of prayer. He attended all the night prayer meetings on the neighboring plantations, and could pray louder than any of the brethren. But Phil had one weakness—he dearly loved money, and different from the negro generally, he loved to hord it up. Near by us lived a man who, not troubled by any scruples, would pay Phil a dollar to work in his field on Sundays. One Sunday as Phil came home after dark I accosted him with:

"Where have you been, Phil?"

"Oh, just knocking about, massa."

"You have been working for Miller."

"Well, you see, massa, the old fellow is in needs, and he just showed me a silver dollar and I jest couldn't stand it."

"Ain't you afraid the Devil will get you for breaking the Sabbath?"

Phil scratched his head a minute, and said:

"I guess the Lord 'll 'scuse me, massa."

"No. He says. Remember the Sabbath day and keep it holy."

Phil went off looking pretty sober, and it was not long before I heard his voice in fervent prayer back of the barn, and so I thought I would slip down near enough to hear.

"Oh Lord!" I heard him say, "I have this day ripped and teared, cussed and sweared at them confounded oxen of Miller's, and jest broke the Sabbath day. Oh, Lord, please forgive me; please forgive me, for you knows I's nothing but a misserable heathen, anyhow. If you'll jest forgive me this time, I'll never do it again as long as I live; 'cepting he gives me two dollars and a half a day."

At this point I was obliged to beat a hasty retreat, but I am thinking that Poor Uncle Phil isn't the only $2.50 Christian in the world.—Louisville Christian Observer.

A great many people who want to be wrapped up well when they retire at night dislike very much to be rapped up in the morning.

WHAT BECAME OF THE QUEENS OLD DRESSES.

The following advertisement appeared recently in a New York paper: Ladies desirous of purchasing articles from the wardrobe of Queen Victoria can do so by calling at Mrs. Martin,——West Forteth street. The vendor of the cast-off clothing told a reporter for the Mercury that every three months witnesses a complete renewal of Queen Victoria's wardrobe. It falls the perquisite of the maids of honor who, in fact, recive no other reward These exalted but frugal ladies sell itin a lump, and divide the money it bring among them. The discarded garb of Britian's greatness having been packed in bundles is transcorted by night to the residence of a Mrs. Marks who recieves it from the trusted carrier and returns the money. She does with it what ladies and gentleman, who deal in cast off clothing, plebian or regal, the world over do with their wares. It finds a ready sale in London, at comparitively enormous prices, to ladies who desire to possess some souvenir of their sovereign. In free America the demand is equally great. The customers are all natives, but they gush over the remnants of royal finery with as much fervor as any fullfledged cockney toady ever could. The first thing they do is to kiss them the next is to try them on. Then they commence to criticise them; but there's one thing they never do, which is to refuse to pay the price.

WICKED FOR CLERGYMEN.—Rev.—, Washington, D. C., writes: I believe it to be all wrong and even wicked for clergymen or other public men to be led into giving testimonials to quack doctors or vile stuffs called medicines, but when a really meritorious article made of valuable remedies known to all, that all physicians use and trust in daily, we should freely command it. I therefore cheerfully and heartily commend Hop Bitters for the good they have done me and my friends, firmly believing they have no equal for family use. I will not be without them."—New York Baptist Weekly.

THE LIME-KILL CLUB.

Although the club had a full dozen invitations to participate in outside parades and celebrations, most of the members remained in Detroit on the Fourth. Paradise Hall was open to callers from 9 a. m. to 10 p. m. and the register shows that over 600 visitors passed the portals. Among others were ex Judge Sufficiree, of Canada; Col. Shellbark, of Wisconsin; ex Senator Cauliflower Jones, of Ohio; Miss Ada Hooper, the "Colored Nightingale of Virginia, and the representatives of several colored military civic societies. During the afternoon Miss Hooper sang several songs and took up a collection for the benefit of the Chicago fire sufferers. At 4 o'clock sixty members of the club indulged in a street parade lasting for an hour, and then returned to the hall to indulge in lemonade, buttermilk, root beer, cocoanuts, peanuts, and other patriotic fodder.

WHO ARE INSANE?

"What I war' going to remark," began Brother Gardner as the hour arrived and the triangle sounded, "am to ask who among you am insane? I should like to make out a list as soon as possible, an' I hope dat no lunatic will feel backwards about handin' in his name.

"You look surprised," continued the old man, as he walked up and down in front of his desk, "but I am quite satisfied dat we have at least a dozen lunatics among us. De man dat shot de President could read law an' plead it; he could cheat, lie, swindle, bilk hotels, buy an' sell, court an' go on long journeys, an, yet he am declared to be crazy. No one else knowed it 'till he became an assassin. If he hadn't tried to commit murder he would still be looked upon as a dead beat instead of a lunatic. Now I propose to take time by de 4-lock and make a list of de lunatics in our club fur de benefit of de purleece. Let each assassin stan' up as his name is called by de Seckretary."

The Secretary went through the roll in his usual sing-song way, and not a member stood up.

"Werry well," said the president, "let de Seckretary make a note of dis. You have all plead guilty to bein' perfectly sane, an' you mus take de consequences. If ary one of you walk out of a grocery wid a cod fish under your coat, or am oberhauled by de purleece wid a bag of chickens on your back, doan' try to shirk the consequences by pleadin' insanity."

TWO JUDGES ON MODERATE DRINKING

Judge Ardagh, junior judge of Simcoe Cunty, Ontario, in his instructions to the clerks and bailiffs of the Division Courts in that County, quotes the following amongst other extracts from the papers of the senior judge, issued more than ten years ago:

"One point more upon which I claim no right to direct, but in a kindly spirit to officers would say a word.

"As nearly every trade has its peculiar disease so every position in life has its particular temptations—that of bailiff is the almost insensible gliding from the temperate use of intoxicating beverage to habits of drunkenness. My advice is to abstain altogether. I know as a fact that spirituous liquors will not strengthen men to bear exposure and fatigue, and there is great peril to persons circumstanced as bailiffs are, who take them as a habit.

"I regret that in one case in this County I felt called upon to remark, whatever may be the cause of neglect of duty by bailiffs the character of the Court suffers thereby. A dullard, a drunkard, or a drone is not a fit person for any office of trust, and such a one it becomes a duty to remove."

To this Judg Ardagh adds:—

"I entirely agree with my brother, Judge Gowan, in the foregoing observations, and I wish all officers to bear this in mind."

DANGER! BEWARE! As you value your life, beware of opiates in diarrhœa mixtures. They quell pain, but checking too suddenly, the results is inflammation. DR. FOWLER'S EXTRACT WILD STRAWBERRY, made from the Wild Strawberry plant and other healing vegetables, is nature's own cure for all forms of bowel complaint.

CREMATION HALL.

A correspondent of the Pall Mall Gazette writing from Gotha, Germany, describes the Cremation hall in that place, with the exception of Milan, the only one in Europe. It was built two and a half years ago, and since that time the bodies of 52 persons, including five women, have been incinerated. The correspondent writes: "Nine hours of preliminary preparation are necessary; and it must be explained in order to remove any feeling of repugnance on the part of the reader, that the body is not burned in flame, but is reduced to ashes by air heated to 600 deg. Reaumur. Two hours elapse before the ashes are collected—six pounds being the usual in the case of a man, four in that of a woman. As I have before said, the process is not visable, and is so scientific that every element of horror is eliminated. The ceremony takes place in silent solemnity, only the necessary officials and one or two near relatives being admitted. I think few visitors will visit this ceremation hall without being deeply impressed in favor of a system so advantageous to the living, and, it must be admitted—at least, of France and Germany—also advantageous to the dead. Here, as in France, the law compels such prompt interment that in many cases it has been known to take place before the breath has left the body. In Algera I have known personally a victim of this misapprehension; and my German friends system as, irrespective of other advantages preventing premature burial."

A new epidemic has made its appearance in the Novgorod district in Russia. The suffers are seized with constant bleeding at the nose, and their bodies are marked with lage black spots. The disease would appear to be contagious, as a quarantine has been established around the affected district.

BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS cures all diseases of the blood, liver and kidneys, female complaints, nervous and general debility, and builds up the entire system when broken down by disease.

THE Hon. Edward Blake is at present making a tour of the Maritime Provinces.

FIRE.—A dwelling house, and stable on the farm lately occupied by James Hogan, Artemesia, about 12 o'clock on Thursday night, the 14th., was destroyed by fire. Cause of fire unknown.

THE ship laborers' strike in Montreal is about over. Leonard, the Secretary of the Union, was arrested on Monday, and it is likely he will be severely punished, as a loaded revolver was found on his person when arrested. The balance of the men appear to be thoroughly cowed.

THE body of a young lady was discovered on the afternoon of the 19th, opposite Queenston, by James Robbins, of Lewiston, N. Y. The body is apparently that of a young lady about 16 or 18 years of age, five feet four or six inches in height, dark brown hair, full, round face, good teeth, and has been nice looking. Her clothing, of which she had retained nearly the whole, consisted of a white cotton chemise, with a woven cotton waist or jersey over it. The dress is of black cashmere, modern style, with bead and lace trimmings; stockings, white cotton, of good material, and number three or three and a half kid button shoes, with French heels, without heel plates.

GRAND MASONIC EXCURSION.—The members of Lorne Lodge, Shelburne, intend availing themselves of the Civic holiday in their little town by giving an excursion to Toronto and Lorne Park on Friday the 29th inst. The train leaves Markdale at 5.00 a.m., arriving in Toronto at 10:30, when the steamer Empress of India will be in waiting to take excursionists to the Park. Returning, the train leaves the city at 5:00 p.m., and reaches here about 10:30. Return tickets are offered at the very low rate of $1.25, children half-price, and those who desire it may return on any of the regular trains next day by payment of 50c. extra. Owing to the change of gauge there will be but few excursions this summer, so the present opportunity should be improved. Tickets to be had from Mr. McFarland, here, and at the station and also on board the train. The Shelburne Brass and Quadrille Bands will accompany the party. See large posters for full particulars.

THE CROPS.

Haying is well advanced, and a great many are through. The crop is much better than was expected some time ago, some fields yielding one ton per acre, yet, on the whole, the crop is a slight one, not averaging over half a ton per acre. Fall wheat will be ripe in a few days. There was a greater breadth than usual sown, fully half of which has been ploughed up and resown with other grain—chiefly barley. What is left will be, we would judge,—a three-fourth crop. Oats, Peas and Barley promises an abundant crop. Potatoes never looked better.

FRUIT.—The strawberries have been almost a total failure, Apples and Plums will be a light crop. Taking into consideration the high price for stock, the prospect for good market and a full average crop of grain with the high prices paid through the season for butter and eggs, the farmers prospects are indeed encouraging.

VICTORIA DISASTER.

THE case against Captain Rankin and Mr. George Parish, was concluded on Monday. They were sent up to stand their trial for manslaughter, bail being accepted—Parish in $2,000 and one surety of $1,000; Rankin, two bondsmen in $1,500 each.

FLESHERTON.

Correspondence to the STANDARD.

The natural scenery of Artemesia is generally allowed to be second to none in Ontario. We have the Eugenia Falls, which are fast gaining a national reputation, and although not quite so extensive as the Falls of Niagara, are, as a natural piece of scenery, not so very far behind after all. The chief difference, perhaps, lies only in the fact, that at the one one place there is a Suspension Bridge, at the other there isn't. But the thought has occurred to us, that the lack might be very easily supplied. Everybody knows that there is a bridge on the Saugeen at Tyrone, the transportation of which to Eugenia Falls might prove ornamental, if not useful. The architectural features of this bridge are of a highly scientific order, and reflect no ordinary credit on the remarkable mechanical genius of him who constructed it. Niagara has its Suspension Bridge, and Eugenia may thus also have its suspension; for one of the beauties of this erection is that, it will pass for a suspension or any other kind of bridge. As the Council can afford to spend the people's money on such a bridge, and place it in a locality where it does not appear to be appreciated, we would suggest its removal to Eugenia, and thus combine artificial with natural beauty. This additional attraction would, doubtless, draw crowds from all quarters, and if the bridge was once in position over the falls, a small charge of 10c. per head for each one crossing the suspension might bring in quite a little revenue, which could be applied to swails and sidewalk repairs around Flesherton.

EUPHRASIA.

From our own Correspondent.

WE had a grand celebration on the 12th at Rocklyn. Great crowd, quiet orderly, and respectable. Everybody was there, and their cousins, and—and —the young men say somebody else was there too. If this is not true, just ask some of the young men on the 5th con. Euphrasia.......A daughter of John Gibson, of the 4th, died to day from the intense heat of the 9th.......A short editorial in your last requires explanation. Your readers here do not know whether you mean the Messrs. Andrews or Jerome the faultless, by the "lunatic who runs the smut-machine at Thornbury. Please rise and explain, and enlighten thou our understanding, O ye Editor....... The spring crops in this section never gave promise of a more bountiful harvest. Hay crop light, potato bugs plentiful.

[For the benefit of our correspondent and our readers in general, we beg to say that the Messrs. Andrews are unknown to us, consequently we could not have referred to them.—ED.]

EUGENIA.

From our own Correspondent.

As announced the Deputy Commissioners of Crown Lands visited this place, and examined parties in regard to the reserves. We had what is generally considered some tall imported swearing on the occasion.

As every ratepayer is more or less interested in Township improvements, we notice some very independent remarks from your able correspondent in Flesherton, whoever that individual is, but how he dare have the boldness to call the attention of the Township officials to the dangerous and bad state of the roads, particularly from the Village to the Station, well known that some one's corns must get trampled upon. Oh, fellow sinner; corns are sore things. Never mind, the bad hole East of the Village is fixed, and that flat may yet get a sprinkling of gravel put on it to keep the wagon wheels from sinking to the hubs.

Another good hotel wanted in Flesherton. True. The great wonder is you have been so long without it. Every body knows it is wanted; but you, Mr. Correspondent, to have the boldness to print the fact. You will likely have your grog stopped if you don't look out. Wild mustard will soon be as plentiful a crop as wild oats, it something is not done to compel those who have it on their farms to try and destroy it before it spreads further.

It seems from the report of the Co. council that the cost of the Warden's address to the county every year is in the neighborhood $183.

THE PIC-NIC OF THE SEASON.—The Union S. S. held their annual pic-nic in the grove at the Falls, on the 4th, the weather was all that could be desired, being sufficently cool for the young folks to enjoy themselves to the full at the different swings erected for the occassion. Not only the young but some of the older heads of families indulging in this favourite pastime. If rich cookery will give one the dyspepsia this was just the place for it, and for tea, we have a fancy that sleep will not be our portion to night. After all had satisfied the cravings of the inner man, the superintendent made some select remarks, and called upon the Rev. Mr. Grandy [illegible] benefit of Sunday School work. After speaking to the children, and all joining the Doxology, they seperated for their homes well pleased with the day's entertainment.

PROLIFIC.—Mr. Geo. Latimer says, he had a hive of bees which, like the Canadians, sent forth a swarm on Dominion Day, and like good loyal subjects, on hearing the sound of fife and drum, again swarmed on the morning of the 12th; and this being the 14th, the day selected for Eugenia S. S. pic-nic, in honor of the occasion, again sent off a third swarm, all are strong in numbers. Beat this if you can; 3 swarms in 14 days from one hive.

How about our gravel roads? We see nothing in the minutes of last County Council concerning them, or has the Advertiser omitted that past. How is it, with our Reeve as Warden, that Artemesia should be put to the expense of applying to the superior Court for a Mandamus in order to get her rights. Councillor Webster evidently means business, and we hope to get some light on the subject by-and-by.

MANITOULIN.

FROM THE EXPOSITOR.

On Saturday evening last as the Str. Asia was coming down Lake George she was met by a steam barge with schooner in tow. The Asia was running very slow at the time and the swell from the barge threw her stern off and brought her quarter right in front of the schooner's bow. The Asia was cut nearly in two and sank in a deep hole where she now lies almost in an upright position. No lives ost.

On Wednesday evening last the house of Wm. Lockyear, of Assignack, was burned to the ground. The contents were totally destroyed. The fire is supposed to have originated from a spark from a bush fire. Loss about $450.

LITTLE CURRENT.

Messrs. Hambly of Hamilton and Jardine of Aylmer arrived by the Emerald on Sunday to spend a few weeks on the Island.

The Twelfth passed off rather quietly this year as the turn-out was small owing to the wet weather. However a very enjoyable time was spent. The Sheguiandall lodge arrived by Griffith's tug and made a grand display with that of Little Current, headed by a Highland piper. Dinner was served in English's hall after which the Orange fraternity repaired to the Methodist church where an appropriate address was delivered by the Rev. J. R. Gibson. The crowd dispersed at an early hour well pleased with the day's proceedings.

Blue-berries are ripe on the North Shore and are coming in in large quantities at 50c. per pail.

Potatoes weighing 7oz. have been dug here this week and green peas are in vogue,

GREEN BAY.

GREEN BAY, July 12.—Haying has commenced and the crop is the best we have had for years.

Our highly esteemed friend Batman has found that "it is not good for man to be alone." He has taken a partner to share his joys and sorrows. We wish him and his fair bride every success in life and may the sun of his happiness ever shine on his course through the squally (no pun meant) sea of matrimony.

We expect another wedding to report shortly. Thibaudeau can still supply all with licenses.

Last week three men of experience and capital visited our oil find. They were well pleased with the prospect. Yesterday it was visited by Bowes, of Little Current, and Dr. Smith, of Stratford. The result we know not, except that one of the parties will begin drilling in a few days. One thing is certain, the indications are good and first come first served. Who will be the first to develop this promising mine of wealth?

Experts say that the paint referred to in a former letter is brown umber.

NOTICE.—We wish it disinctly understood, that we do not hold ourselves reponsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

THAT 'THREATENING' LETTER.

SIR,—The contents of that "threatening" letter recently received by Mrs. McFarland is no mystery, consequently there cannot be any breach of propriety in referring to it through your columns. We attach no importance whateyer to that letter, believing it to be the output of some thoughtless mischief maker; yet while we take this view of the matter the question naturally and necessarily presents itself—What is the spirit which evokes the language of that letter?

That a great crime has been committed in our midst is generally acknowledged; a crime all the greater because the law provides no adequate punishment for the offence, yet a crime which every virtuous person in the community, especially every father and mother regards with loathing and horror.

That the perpetrator of this crime has returned to his former haunts apparently unabashed and indifferent, regardless of the feelings of those whom he so cruelly and so cowardly insulted is also undeniable.

That the moral sentiment of Markdale and community is so obtuse, so vitiated, so thoroughly degraded and brutalized as to permit this wretch unwhipt and unrepentent, to come back so soon and resume his place in society must, to outsiders, appear marvellous in the extreme, and cannot fail to strike beholders as indubitable evidence of the depravity which rankles in our midst.

How is this? Why is it that such blackguards can feel at home in Markdale? Why, simply this, at every street corner, nay, almost every step, he can find his counterpart in some moral bankrupt whose record is perhaps even blacker than his own, ever ready to give countenance and encouragement "hail fellow well met," who helps to swell the "scumscurvy" brigade.

There is no denying the fact that those who harbur and countenance such disreputable "sneaks" as Owen, manifest a callous indifference to the feelings and susceptibilities of respectable people greatly inconsistent with common decency, let alone the higher requirements of refined Christian society.

Taking this view of the matter, is it any wonder if some one taking advantage of the occasion has tried so frighten certain parties into a compliance with the requirements of decency, propriety and self-respect. Does any one suppose that if Owen on his return to Markdale had been treated with scorn and derision which he deserved, and which his crime had justly merited, that he (void of feeling though he be) could have long braved the withering contempt which would have met him at every turn? Certainly not! He would have betaken himself to some far off field where "his name and his fame" were alike unknown; and who would say that his departure would be any loss to Markdale?

WM. BROWN.

MARKDALE, July 15 1881.

GRAVENHURST.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

SIR,—Perhaps a few notes from this enterprising town may not be out of place. The first query may be, Where is it? In answer to this I would just say that it is situated on a sandy knoll, laying between a small lake about 5 miles long by 1¼ wide, called Gull lake, on the East, and Muskoka bay on the west, about 44 miles North-east from Barrie, and is the terminus of the Northern Railroad, 115 miles by rail from Toronto. The second question, perhaps, would be, What is it? I answer that it is an incorporated village, with a population variously estimated at from 1,500 to 2,000, and is, and from the nature of things must, for a considerable time continue to be, a commercial centre of considerable importance. Lying at the end of the railway traffic, and at the head of the inland navigation traffic, which opens up to the steamers leaving here daily, a voyage of some 60 miles to the back country, away up to the heads of Lakes Joseph and Rosseau, and up the Muskoka river to Bracebridge; also to the line of stages, which runs from the north point reached by the steamers from here, away to Lake Nipissing, connecting there with a steamer belonging to the same company, and so bringing the trade for that whole district, a distance of 100 miles north through this place. It is also headquarters of the Lumber trade for a large area, in fact all that can be reached by the lakes or any of the streams emptying into them. We have, with Gravenhurst as a centre, in a radius of some 5 miles, about 20 saw and shingle mills, which employ a great number of hands, a saw mill here that will not cut 15 or 20 thousand feet of lumber per day is hardly classed as a saw mill, many of them cutting from 30 to 40. There are several general stores, and quite a number of provision and feed stores, one large hardware store, and 2 or 3 tin and stove shops, 5 hotels, and several private boarding houses, 4 Churches, vis: Roman, Episcopal, Presbyterian, C. Methodist; the P. Methodists preach in the Town Hall, and if all were full about 500 of the population would still be out in the cold. More anon.

C. C. G.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

SIR,—I noticed a communication in last week's Advance, re. the 12th in Markdale, reflecting discredit on the Hotels of that place, regarding the quality and quantity of eatables, which was no doubt overdrawn. However, one thing is sure, we had a first-class dinner at Mrs. Caswell's.

OBSERVER.

The annual S. S. Pic-nic in connection with St. Mary's Church, Maxwell, took place on Wednesday, and was a very pleasent affair. About 30 of Christ Church congregation of Markdale went out, including the choir.

Those people who have for years past annually expressed sorrow for bald-headed men in fly time have simply wasted their breath. Surgeons declare that flies avoid bald heads on account of the odor of the scalp, and that one shock headed man will suffer more from fly bites in one month than ten bald heads will all summer. Keep your sympathies for the heathen of Africa, who are beset by flies, fleas, snakes, lizzards and scorpions the year round.

ANOTHER COMET.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., July 16.—J. M. Schæberle, of Ann Arbor, Mich., has discovered a comet in right ascension 5 hours, 48 minutes, declination north 38 degrees, 45 minutes. The comet was seen this morning in the constellation Auriga by Prof. Swift. It is larger and more luminous than the one Prof. Swift discovered on May last. The comet is telescopic. This is the fourth comet discovered since May last. Prof. Swift thinks it is the comet of 1812. It is moving slowly towards the north-west.

Prof. Swift reports thhe new comet has probably not yet passed round the sun, and may increase in brightness enough to be visible to the naked eye. Its motion is north-west, and it can be found near Capella.

A TOWN IN RUINS.

OVER THIRTY PERSONS KILLED.

CHICAGO, July 16.—The town of New Ulm, on the Minnesota river, 65 miles from St. Pauls, containing 3,500 people, was wrecked by a cyclone this afternoon. The wires went down in the river, and the only meagre details have been received. It seems two currents of air swept over the valley simultaneously, coming from different directions. The scene was appalling. Stone and brick buildings were rased to the foundations, and the air was full of debris. The town is down a mass of ruins. West Newton, in the neighboring county, was also visited, and a family of three killed. So far as known twelve were killed twenty wounded, some very seriously, in the New Ulm valley. In one instance the headless body of a girl was found on the prairie. In another, the trunk of a man was found. An old gentleman was found dead with his arms clasped around a tree. Many people had limbs broken; they are mostly Germans.

NEW ULM, Minn., July 17.—The cyclone which struck this place on Friday evening was of the most terrific character. Over 100 buildings were demolished, and upward of thirty persons killed and wounded. Though other towns in the vicinity felt the shock, the full force of the cyclone vented itself here. Two tornadoes met directly over this place, and the work of destruction was accomplished in less than fifteen minutes.

THE COURSE OF THE CYCLONE

could be distinctly discerned, and seemed to be moving in separate volumes from the north and south. Clouds gathered with great rapidity and there was a perfect blaze of fire balls. It would have been almost as dark as midnight had it not been for the continual dashes of lightning. The thunder and lightening were terrific, and the wind blew a hurricane, while the rain descended in blinding sheets. There was a moment's lull, then the cyclone struck the town, almost destroying it in a minute. At the end of that time it disappeared as suddenly as it came. Its effect are almost indescribable. Some houses were struck by lightning, other lifted up bodily by the violence of the wind others demolished by flying debris from other buildings. Scores of dwelling and stores are entirely destroyed. Very few escaped uninjured, but many had their roofs blown off or were so badly unjointed that they will have to be pulled down and rebuilt. The storm was most destructive in the north end of the city, where

WHOLE BLOCKS OF FRAME BUILDINGS WERE SWEPT AWAY.

Hardly a barn or stable escaped, and it is estimated that over 100 horses and cattle were killed. The roof of the hotel was carried for blocks through the air and hurled against Jacob Miller's house, which it completely demolished, but fortunately the Miller family escaped before the rash came. The Mayor estimates the loss at half a million. The lowest estimate is $350,000. None of the property is insured. Many have lost their all. The citizens, however, met the disaster bravely, and are taking prompt steps to repair the damage. The streets are filled with debris and on every hand evidences of the force of the storm were visable. The large brick meat market, the Methodist and Lutheran churches were swept away, the steeples of three Catholic churches blown off and the buildings gutted. A hotel was partly destroyed, the roof of the court-house carried off, and many business places and two public schools destroyed. The lightening struck the depot three times. Every liverystable is in ruins, and a new brewery costing $30,000 was destroyed. The lightening struck the flouring mill and shattered the building, letting out 20,000 bushels of wheat. A number of the buildings struck by lightning caught fire, and the town would have been destroyed this way but for the rain. Whole lumber yards were destroyed. The storm was fearful to contemplate. People on the streets were literally blown away and a number wounded by the flying debris Whole tin roofing was sent through the air and twisted and crumbled like paper. A large quantity of grain was destroyed in the valley, wheat land being cut clean and smooth. Subscriptions for the sufferers are already coming in. The storm was about a mile wide.

ST. PAUL, July 16.—Latter reports show that the storm which devastated Fairfield was the most destructive ever known in Minnesota. It swept a strip of country a mile wide and forty long. Houses, barns, and farm machinery were strewen in all directions. Stock was killed by wholesale. Fifteen persons were killed and wounded. Some bodies were not recovered until the following morning, been dropped half a mile away. The people are left in a most pitiable plight, without shelter or clothing.

At Cairo five were killed by the cyclone. Two bodies were found denuded in a tree 89 rods from a house. At West Newton five bodies were found.

WHOLE FAMILIES KILLED.

ST. PAUL, Minn., July 17.—The cyclone on Thursday night destroyed two large elevators near Crookston. The New Ulm cyclone devastated the country forty miles in extent. The damage is yet unknown, but a large number of people have been killed and wounded outside New Ulm. In some instances whole families were killed, and on one farm twenty-five cattle were found dead.

PROSPECT HOUSE, Niagara, July 16.—Frank Blackman, a resident of Stamford, aged 35 years, and employed by H. H. Wright as a basket maker, a sober and industrious fellow, married, and has two children, tried to end his life about four o'clock this morning. Blackman left his sleeping apartment adjoining the basket factory secured a driving line, fastened it to a beam in the shed outside, arranged a berry crate to stand on, fixed the line around his neck, and kicked the crate from under him, but his weight stopped the knot, and left him standing on his feet on the ground. Finding this method not successful, he took his large jackknife from his pocket to cut his throat. Just as he made an incision in the left side of his neck, inflicting a deep gash, he noticed some of the employees moving about. Fearing he might be detected and prevented from accomplishing his deed he ran upstairs to his sleeping apartment, took a loaded gun from its place on the wall, cocked it, rested the stock on the floor and placed the muzzle to his breast, stooped over, touched the trigger, and the charge entered his shoulder, inflicting a painful but not dangerous wound. In bending over to reach the trigger, the barrel being long must have shifted the gun from his breast to his shoulder. The household was aroused by the report, and on learning the cause a doctor was immediately sent for, who dressed the wounds. At present the patient is doing well. No cause has so far been ascertained for the rash act, further than that Mrs. Blackman has been visiting with her father over two months, with the children. Blackman has for the past few weeks appeared very melancholy.

AN Explosion took place in the Fireworks Establishment of Dixon Bros., Hamilton, blowing the building to pieces, and severely injuring three men and sending a fourth about thirty feet against a fence. One of the victims was so badly burned that the flesh dropped from his hands and arms. The doctors think the whole of the injured men will recover.

“THE Glorious Twelfth” was loyally celebrated by the various lodges of this district this year at Rocklyn. Headed by the Meaford Cornet Band after dinner, which by-the-way was got up in grand style by “mine host” Berry, they marched to Black's grove, where stirring addresses were delivered by Revs. McLaren and Clarke. After the speaking the procession reformed and marched back with their gay banners unfurled to the breeze, through the arches of evergreen to the agricultural grounds, where the usual cheers were given, and the brethren quietly dispersed. The brethren are to be congratulated on the orderly manner in which their celebration was conducted, and much credit is due Mr. Berry for the accommodation he afforded with the space at his disposal.—Monitor.

DIED IN JAIL.—A man who was well known around here as Dr. Eloot, died recently in Walkerton Jail. Deceased was given to drink and was frequently put in jail as a vagrant. He was not a regular physician, but practised medicine when opportunity offered.

As the season for Peaches, Pears, Grapes, and all kinds of Fruits is approaching, McIntyre wishes to let the public know that his is the right place to look for them, as he will always have them on hand, at market prices.

MARRYING HIS STEPMOTHER.—The Clifford Arrow reports a marriage between a man and his stepmother. A son of the late Mr. Procknow of the Township of Carrick, married his father's widow who is much older than himself. They continue to live on the old homestead.

ASK your dealers for “Castorine” machine oil, and see that the barrel is branded “Castorine,” as none other is genuine.

ALMOST AN ACCIDENT.—On Dominion day, at the pic-nic in Normanby several persons had a narrow escape from what might have proved a fatal accident. As the people were sitting under the trees, near where the speaking was going on, a large limb fell from a tree in the midst of them, and yet strange to say no one was injured. The escape was most miraculous.

DR. FOWLER'S EXTRACT OF WILD STRAWBERRY cures summer complaints, diarrhœa, dysentery, cholera morbus, cholera infantum, sour stomach, colic, nausea, vomiting, canker, piles, leucorrhœa, and all manner of fluxes.

A DISASTROUS fire occurred on Monday morning at Woodbridge, causing a loss of about $15,000. The fire broke out in a stable belonging to a baker, and so insignificant did it appear that no alarm was given. The wind being high, however, it soon spread, and that so rapidly, that Mr. Wallace, M.P., telegraphed to Toronto for assistance. The call was promptly responded to, and well it was, as the entire village would have been destroyed. As it is, a considerable portion of it was consumed.

The golden age—the present—when Esterbrook's popular Steel Pen are within the reach of all. The stationers can supply them. Wholesale by the leading Toronto stationers.

THE Steamer City of Winnipeg, running from Collingwood to Duluth, was destroyed by fire on the morning of the 19th inst., whilst lying at her dock at Duluth. The passengers were all saved, but four of the crew are missing, one fireman, one porter, and two waiters. She was insured for $30,000—valued at $50,000.

USE “Castorine” Machine Oil, for all kinds of machinery, it is also excellent for harness and leather, making it water and weather proof. For sale by dealers.

BURGLARY.—The premises of Mr. Ira Fike were entered on Sunday or Monday night last and most of his barber apparatus stolen. As the parties who perpetrated the theft are well known to Mr. Fike, if the articles are not returned forthwith, he will take action at once.—Review.

A SAD CALAMITY.—On Monday last a son John Lochead with another boy was bathing in the Scone mill dam. He was only about eight years of age and consequently could not swim, it seems while walking along the bank he somehow slipped down, the water being deep and no person at hand to assist him, he was unfortunately drowned before help could be got. The other boy who was younger than the deceased ran and alarmed his mother, who in turn hurried over to the mill, and sought assistance, but it was too late, when the body was found life was extinct. The parents have the sympathy of the community.—Enterprise.

Cathartic Pills

Combine the choicest cathartic principles in medicine, in proportions accurately adjusted to secure activity, certainty, and uniformity of effect. They are the result of years of careful study and practical experiment, and are the most effectual remedy yet discovered for diseases caused by derangement of the stomach, liver, and bowels, which require prompt and effectual treatment. AYER'S PILLS are specially applicable to this class of diseases. They act directly on the digestive and assimilative processes, and restore regular healthy action. Their extensive use by physicians in their practice, and by all civilized nations, is one of the many proofs of their value as a safe, sure, and perfectly reliable purgative medicine. Being compounded of the concentrated virtues of purely vegetable substances, they are positively free from calomel or any injurious properties, and can be administered to children with perfect safety.

AYER'S PILLS are an effectual cure for Constipation or Costiveness, Indigestion, Dyspepsia, Loss of Appetite, Foul Stomach and Breath, Dizziness, Headache, Loss of Memory, Numbness, Biliousness, Jaundice, Rheumatism, Eruptions and Skin Diseases, Dropsy, Tumors, Worms, Neuralgia, Colic, Gripes, Diarrhœa, Dysentery, Gout, Piles, Disorders of the Liver, and all other diseases resulting from a disordered state of the digestive apparatus.

As a Dinner Pill they have no equal.

While gentle in their action, these PILLS are the most thorough and searching cathartic that can be employed, and never give pain unless the bowels are inflamed, and then their influence is healing. They stimulate the appetite and digestive organs; they operate to purify and enrich the blood, and impart renewed health and vigor to the whole system.

THE STEP-MOTHER.

The stepmother's lot is hard. From the first she is a target for ill-nature. Her marriage is generally an unsentimental one. She needs a home, and her husband requires a mother for his children. It is a business transaction on both sides. But if little sentiment exist, the call of duty is clear and many a step-mother who subsequently meets with abuse starts with a desire to do her duty. But her husband's children repel her by their unkindness, and unjust suspicion. Every fault that she commits is sized on to prove that she is true to the character of her class; and the children triumph in the vindication of a general truth. She cannot always reckon on the support of her husband for he loves his children and hates family disputes. He is apt to side with his children as against a legal wrongdoer. The wife, although she may have married prosaically, does not like to be set at naught in her own house, and she determines to get the better of her husband. Every source of domestic anarchy thus becomes increased, until the entire house is plunged into all the miseries of a sort of civil war. And the poor stepmother bears the entire blame. Girls, old and young, should think carefully before consenting to occupy such a trying position. Better face the terror of old maidenhood than undertake duties which it is impossible to fulfil to the satisfaction of all concerned

CURED OF DRINKING.—"A young friend of mine was cured of an insatiable thirst for liquor, which had so prostrated him that he was unable to do any business. He was entirely cured by the use of Hop Bitters. It allayed all that burning thirst; took away the appetite for liquor, made his nerves steady, and he has remained a sober and steady man for more than two years, and has no desire to return to his cups; I know of a number of, others that have been cured of drinking by it."—From a leading R. R. Official, Chicago, Ill.—Times.

A REMARKABLE PONY.

A well authenticated and extraordinary case of the sagicity of the Shetland pony has just come under our notice. A year or two ago Mr. Wm. Sinclair, pupil teacher, Holm, imported one of the little animals from Shetland on which to ride to and from school, his residence being at a considerable distance from the school buildings. Up to that time the animal had been unshod, but sometime afterward Mr. Sinclair had it shod by Mr. Pratt, the parish blacksmith. The other day Mr. Pratt, whose smithy is a long distance from Mr. Sinclair's house, saw the pony, without halter or anything upon it, walking up to where he was working. Thinking the animal had strayed from home, he drove it off, throwing stones after the beast to make run homewards. This had the desired effect for a short time but Mr. Pratt had only got fairly to work once more in the smithy when the pony's head again made it's appearance at the door.

On proceeding the second time outside to drive the pony away, Mr. Pratt with a blacksmith's instinct took a look at the pony's feet, when he observed that one of the shoes had been lost. Having made a shoe he put it on, and then waited to see what the animal would do. For a moment it looked at the blacksmith as if asking whether he was done, then pawed once or twice to see if the newly shod foot was comfortable, and finally gave a pleased neigh, erected his head and started home at a brisk trot. The owner was exceedingly surprised to find the animal at home completly shod the same evening, and it was only on calling at the smithy some time afterwards that he learned the full extent of his pony's sagicity.

ALMOST A TRAGEDY.

At Havay, near Mons, their lately lived a peasant, the dampness of whose cottage led him to try the experiment of an auto de fe on a small scale as a cure for his ills. Some weeks ago—owing, it is presumed, to the unsatisfactory nature of his habitation—he lost a child, and, what appeared to him at least as serious, a cow. He and his wife also felt poorly. The twain accordingly decided to consult the wise man of the village—'le devine,' as that functionary was called. It appears that few Belgian hamlets are without a devine of this discription. "Go home," he said to the peasent, "and to-morrow morning burn the first person who crosses your door-step. That person will have been the cause of your ills. I will take care that God sends him." The countryman went home as directed, and, with the aid of his spouse, prepared a kind of funeral pile in the biggest room in the house. Early next morning arrived a neighbor, a kind hearted woman, who had rendered all sorts of services to the pair. Notably, she had nursed their child during its last illness. The peasant exclaimed: "Ah, it's you. I might have thought so," then seized the luckless woman and bound her to the pile. His wife had meantime bolted the door, after which she sat fire to the wood. The screams of the victim in no way softened them and her life might have ended in torture had not a lucky inspiration occurred to her. "Don't let me die without confession," she moaned. "That's only fair," replied the peasant, and sent his wife for the priest, who lived only two doors off. The woman executed her consnsision faithfully enough, and the tragedy was cut short—just in time. The Mons tribunal condemened the peasant to two months and his wife to forty days' imprisonment, and to pay the victim 300 francs.

Dr. Loring, the new commissioner of agriculturel, is the son of a clergyman who lived at North Andover, Mass. The story is told that he and his brother were gaunt boys. Their father sent them one day to an adjacent cattle show with some very fat hogs to exhibit. The boys were rather proud of the many compliments paid to the hogs, until a farmer came along and said to an acquaintances: "Mighty nice hogs those of Parson Loring's; but why dont he feed his boys more and hogs less.

BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS cures scrofula, erysipelas, salt rheum, piles, and all humors of the blood. Cures dyspepsia, liver complaint, biliousness, constipation, dropsy, kidney complaints, headache, nervousness, female weakness, and general debility.

Mr. Fawcett, Postmaster-General of Great Britain, is a, most extraordinary man. He was made totally blind when a young man by the bursting of a gun. But in spite of that, he is one of the best informed men of the day; a profound mathematician, and widely read in literature and history. He can handle a rod and fly with wonderful success. In the House of Commons he is greatly respected by all parties. An attendant guides him to the door, and there ready hands are always to be found to direct the sightless Minister to his place. When he is addressed he turns his head, as though he could see the person to whom his reply is directed. The most remarkable feature about his speech is his wonderful command of facts and figures which, thanks to his acute memory, he masters with marvelous rapidity and retentiveness. He is greatly aided by his wife, whose attainments are almost equal to his own. Since he was made Postmaster-General he has introduced many reforms, improved the postage stamps, introduced a new system of money orders or checks for small sums, and a plan by which the postoffice receives stamps as deposits in savings banks, in order to carry out his favorite idea in offering the poor every possible facility for practicing thrift.

HOW TO GET RICH.

[The following lines were composed by a young lady teacher at the Hamilton [illegible] School.—]

Put on the air of an eight-lived fatty,
If you're only a penny whistling [illegible]
Pass where you can for a [illegible]
If you're only a road side thistle.

Blow whenever you blow your horn,
So people can understand,
That you may be sharp, but you won't B flat
In society's great brass band.

Pass the plate or hat in church,
With the usual Sabbath air;
But more with a mild, religious squeak
That people may know you're there.

If you carry a [illegible] six inches long,—
And a [illegible] scarce [illegible] longer—
[illegible]
And the longer it is the stronger.

But if in the order of nasal tubes
Your organ is brief in measure,
Then brevity being the soul of wit,
Consider your pug a treasurer.

Love your neighbour, but mark the force
Of the Gospel rule of grace;
The more you admire yourself my friend,
The higher your neighbor's place.

Clink your dime in the deacon's face,
As if you were throwing gold,
And give with an eye to the business hope
Of reaping a hundredfold.

Whether your reading is little or great,
Quote rightly or never quote;
Polish your uppers though down at the heel
And never endorse a note.

Always advance best hand, best foot,
(Best hand, best foot your own),
And thus youmay feast on the fat of the land,
While others enjoy the bone.

VIOLA'S REVENGE.

By the Author of "MY LADY'S SECRET," "A WAIF'S FORTUNES," "THE LADY OF GORMON LEA," &c.

"But for all that, Viola—Viola my darling," he continued, "I cannot give you up. What need of priestly blessing to rivet our marriage vows? Come with me to my own land, where the heavens are not so blue, nor the earth so fair as in your sunny Italy, but where men love truly and cleave faithfully to those whom they adore. Say that you will not send me thither companionless, Viola my beloved!"

She understood now. Light, dazzling and pitiless, had broken in upon her.

He could not quite read the expression of that gray stony face which looked towards him in such steadfastness under the white moon. He was troubled by a presentiment that it augured ill for the success of his solicitations; but, having put his hand to the plough, he could not turn back.

"Our life shall be a dream of delight, Viola; every moment that I can spare from my duties shall be devoted to you. All that belongs to me shall be yours, to the half of my kingdom. You shall have masters for all you care to learn; I will teach you myself as much as I can. But, above all, dear, that magnificent voice of yours shall be trained and developed. So far as I can judge, organs far inferior and beauty much less striking have commanded a fortune in a week upon the English stage. Your future shall be my care; but—"

Her eyes had been upon him all the time—those wonderful lustrous eyes, deep-fringed, burning as though aflame.

He had felt that his pleadings grew weaker and weaker, and at that "but" he stopped.

"Have you finished?" said Viola in English.

"Ye-es," replied the young nobleman, too astounded at hearing from her lips the accents of his native tongue to remember that there were arguments he had not yet advanced.

"Then go!" said the girl, pointing to the path by which he had ascended. The attitude, the gesture, the intonation were, he thought simply sublime. In spite of himself he fell back a pace or two ere he could collect his thoughts sufficiently even to commence a protest.

"But, Viola——"

"Never dare to call me by that name again!" she burst forth, with vehemence which told of fierceness repressed. "Go your way, Lord Armidale, without another word, and ask of Heaven the forgiveness that I will never grant. The last week has taught you, I think, how an Italian girl can love; you have yet to learn how she can hate. Her love you know; some day—maybe in the long, long future—you shall experience her revenge; meanwhile I would spare you an exhibition of her scorn. Again I bid you go!"

With laggard steps, urged still by that pointing finger, he retreated from her, past the choked-up fountain which had been idle for five hundred years, past the stone column overthrown and shattered centuries before. Where the path began he paused and looked wistfully, but vainly, for some sign of relenting. The next instant she was alone.

Alone, crouching at the foot of the Apollo, with two demons whispering in her ear—the one of love, the other of revenge. Was it possible that it was only a week since the stranger entered her life? Alone; and she had never known loneliness before!

CHAPTER III.

Without the room, a fair Herefordshire landscape, a section of the Valley of the Wye, and all it so far as the eye could reach, from the trim gardens below to the distant hills, the property of one man. Within the room, a faint and earthy smell—a bed whereon the owner lay dying.

It was a chamber of goodly proportions, but uncarpeted, and unadorned. No soldier in barracks, or monk in cell, could point to a contrast, in neatness, cleanliness, and general discomfort, between his own sleeping conveniences and those of this wealthy English gentleman. To sleep upon a hard mattress stretched upon a narrow iron bedstead, to emerge from the morning plunge into ice-cold water and shake himself like a dog upon the bare boards of a dressing-room in which, even in the depth of winter, no fire was kindled, were in thorough keeping with the stern character and iron resolution of Squire Burgot of Burgot Grange.

[illegible] Sybarite was he to complain of crumpled rose-leaves. The sheets of his bed, though white as driven snow, were of coarse texture, and the fire to be observed in the grate was a concession, not to the requirements of illness, but to the prejudices of the nurse. It was the nurse whom Squire Burgot was calling now in a voice husky and broken, and strangely unlike his old trumpet-tones.

"Mrs. Bland," he murmured—"Mrs. Bland!"

From a chair by the fire a silver-haired, red-visaged old gentleman rose, and crossed the room with a step the noiselessness of which must have been acquired by continual practice.

He passed round the matress, until he could see the patient's face; and he started perceptibly as he noted how ashen was its hue, how pinched and drawn were the features. The sick man's eyes opened; angry recognition lighted up the sunken orbs.

"Oh, you are Mrs. Bland!" he said, with feeble sarcasm. "Why on earth does not the nurse come when she is called?"

"I sent her out of the room. What can I do for you, Burgot?"

"Nothing; there never yet was a doctor who did anything but bungle in trying to assist Dame Nature. I will tell you something more for your edification, Preece. Mrs. Bland is here to wait upon me; not to run errands for you."

"She will be back presently."

"Then why, in the name of wonder, do you not hand me some stuff to gargle my throat, or something? A pretty doctor, not to see that his patient can hardly speak!"

"Try another dose of your medicine."

"I won't! Faintly I won't! I'll see you in the warmest region on earth before I swallow another drop of your filthy compound! It is my belief——"

"Don't exert yourself quite so much talking, Burgot."

"It is my belief," continued the sick man, with malicious satisfaction in his own disobedience, "that you are trying to poison me by inches, that you may come into the hundred or two you think I may have left you for acting as my executor. Gloriously sold you will be! But, I tell you, Preece; I will write you a cheque for five hundred pounds within half an hour if you will help me to dress, and let me walk down stairs to do it."

A sad smile was the Doctor's only response.

"You will not? A nice confession—a pretty pass you have brought me to, after five weeks of bolusing. I will tell you plainly my opinion, Dr. Preece. It is that you are no better than a quack, sir—a quack."

Unmistakable was the acrimony of that discourteous speech; but it evoked no retort.

After one keen glance at the other's face, the sick man spoke again; but this time the anger left his voice, and his utterance was hardly louder than a whisper.

"Preece," he said.

"What is it, old friend?"

"Forty years," said the dying man, "we have argued, and wrangled, and quarrelled; and I liked you all the better because you were the one man in the neighborhood who was not afraid of my rough tongue, and who did not shun the crossing of swords with me in a dispute. Why you liked me Heaven alone knows."

"I saw the gold beneath the iron," was the reply.

"That cannot be it; yet the fact that you like me remains, I hope and believe. But, Preece, I never said the like to you that I have said to day without a row; and I think it would have been a subject for a real duel, not a verbal one, had I called you a quack before. Am I so ill as that implies, old friend?"

Doctor Preece's eyes filled with sudden tears; but he did not answer. The dying man's eyes were not so dimmed that he could not see them. Into those changed feeble tones of his there came an affectionate gentleness, of which few people would have believed Squire Burgot capable.

"Nay, do not fear to tell the truth, Preece. I had thought myself good for fifteen years as yet; but I am no coward—to be afraid of the leap every man must take. When will it be?"

"To-night," said the doctor solemnly.

"So soon? No time to fetch William then? I should liked to have seen William. I fancy I have not behaved quite well to him, Doctor, first and last."

"You know best," replied Doctor Preece. For ten years he had at odd times dinned this tardily admitted truth into unwilling ears; but he would not say so now.

"I was nearly twenty years his senior," pursued the Squire feebly. "I do not remember sowing many wild oats in my youth, and it was natural perhaps that, when the boy went to the bad, I should be rather hard upon his follies. When he sold his commission, married that Italian woman, and let me into the unpleasant duty of paying a few thousands to square his turf losses and save the family name, I thought I did well to be angry. When I settled a hundred a year upon him, on the sole condition that he should not return to England without my sanction, I considered I had done as much as justice required. The lad must be a true Burgot, Doctor, for he has never offered to eat humble-pie to be restored to favor. Of late I have been wishing for a reconciliation. I should like to see William again."

Doctor Preece was silent. What could he say? In his heart he was repeating the mournful refrain which so often answers such longings—"Too late—too late!"

"But I can make amends to him," continued the Squire, with reviving animation. "Take my keys, Doctor, and unlock the old cabinet in the corner. Often have Mrs. Robert and 'Dear Clara' wondered at the strange whim which led me to keep such an unsuitable article of furniture in my bedroom. That is right; now take out the fifth drawer and press a spring on the right in the recess. Have you done it? Do you see my will?"

"I thought that your will, bequeathing everything to Mrs. Robert Burgot and her daughter Clara, with the exception of a hundred a year to William and five thousand pounds to his daughter Viola, was duly executed long ago," said Doctor Preece, who began to think his patient's mind was wandering.

"Just so—just so; a dummy will, executed to stop Mrs. Robert's mouth, and destroyed immediately. No will made by me is in existence; the one you hold, which is yet unsigned, exactly reverses the provision of its thousand pounds. William enjoys the income from the estate until his death, when it reverts to Viola and Viola's children, or, in the event of her death, to Mrs. Robert and Clara. Call in two of the servants, Preece, and let me sign at once."

"But Clara——"

"Clara is amply provided for, or will be, at Mrs. Robert's death," said the Squire, with a touch of his old arbitrariness. "Will you ring, or must I get out of bed and do it myself? Do not thwart me, old friend; I feel that my time is getting short."

Thus adjured, Doctor Preece obeyed. In a few minutes the will was signed and attested with all legal formalities. The Squire lay back upon his mattress, keeping that last solemn vigil which so rarely seems too long—waiting for death.

He waited patiently, almost cheerfully, accepting the inevitable with a composure the Doctor had hardly anticipated. Very bright and clear was the sick man's mind towards the last; but he would not admit his sister-in-law and Miss Dallas to a parting interview.

"I am weary of their falsehood, their submission, their fulsome flattery!" he cried. "Ever since Robert died, poor fellow, and they came to live at the Grange, they have been awaiting this hour and speculating upon the advantage they might reap from it. Preece, old man, I would give something to see their faces when the will is read."

Then the Doctor tried to turn the dying man's thoughts into a more solemn channel, but with indifferent success.

"Let me alone," was the impatient rejoinder. "Do you think a few minutes at the last is going to weigh a man's life? I stand or fall by what has been done already, and by the help of One who has promised to pull me through. But, Preece, say 'good-bye' to Willie for me. I should have liked to see the boy again."

Willie? The boy? Dr. Preece smiled sadly, thinking that "the boy" must be now forty years of age.

"Doctor, I should like to die at peace with all my friends. There is nothing, I hope of the daily bickerings of forty years?"

"Nothing, Burgot—nothing."

"That is well. You might give an eye to niece Viola—the niece I have never seen—for my sake. Willie would be sure to let the girl run wild. And, Preece, I feel drowsy, as though I might get a wink or two of sleep. Where is your hand?"

Upon that hand the fingers of the dying man tightened as he sank in a peaceful slumber.

The friend of forty years, who had eaten almost daily at his table, and had wrangled as often as he had dined, who knew better than any man living his virtues—which were hidden—and his faults—which were patent to all the world—who loved the stern old Squire like a brother—ay, better than ever a Burgot had loved his own near kindred, sat by him at the last, and held his hand, until that peaceful slumber was merged in the sleep that knows no waking—the sleep of death.

CHAPTER IV.

In a vine-wreathed arbour, upon a sunny hill-slope, sat William Burgot reading the announcement of his brother's death.

There was no fraternal sorrow in his face; that was hardly to be expected, seeing that the dead man had severed all ties of kindred and had doomed him to exile for many years. Nor was there elation which would have been natural at the unexpected change in his own fortune—neither sorrow nor elation, but stupid troubled surprise—surprise which verged upon dismay—was written upon his handsome features; and he repeated vaguely a phrase from the lawyer's letter which lay upon his knee—"The rent roll of your estate is close upon fifteen thousand pounds."

Fifteen thousand a year! A handsome competence truly; a magnificent bribe for the commission of a wrong.

When much reflection had mitigated William Burgot's surprise, perplexity, not unmixed with fear, remained.

"If I only dared," he muttered—"If I only dared!"

He sat there thinking, until it was time for the evening meal.

"If Viola were in the plot, If I could make a confidante of Viola!" was the point to which, from time to time, his meditations brought him. After some such exclamation, he heard her voice calling—

"Papa, papa; where are you?"

And he answered—

"In the arbour, child."

The rustle of a dress, a firm and stately step upon the rocky soil, and she stood before him.

"Viola," he said, "Duke Burgot—your uncle Duke—is dead."

"Yes," replied the girl in a tone of indifference. "I suppose I ought to say that I am sorry; but that would hardly be the truth. I never saw uncle Duke, and I have no great love for England or for English people."

"Yet you are continually talking of going amongst them."

"Because the great purpose of my life calls me thither."

"You may abandon it, Viola. There will be no need for you to earn your fortune upon the stage; a ready-made one awaits your acceptance. Burgot Grange, and estates which bring in about fifteen thousand English pounds per annum [illegible] bequeathed to me, and, at my death, will revert to you."

"Fifteen thousand English pounds every year?" repeated the girl with an air of bewilderment. The magnitude of this sum rendered it fabulous and incredible to one who had esteemed her father's quarterly allowance of five-and-twenty pounds a handsome income. "Papa, will our neighbours, the other English gentry, be as rich?"

"Not many of them, I dare say."

"Then we shall move in the best society—with [illegible] lords, for example?"

"With your [illegible] of [illegible], your blood, and your beauty, you may have a lord for [illegible], Viola, if you like."

"Then [illegible] the [illegible] ment of my life-purpose," said the girl sadly.

"To marry an English lord?" laughed her father. "Is that the secret of your continual borrowings from the library of the monastry? Is that why you and old Spezzio are always exercising that wonderful voice of yours? Has that been your ambition all these years?"

"Ask no questions, papa. Let us go in to supper."

"There is something I want to tell you first," said William Burgot, desperately.

His fingers were crumbling and twisting the lawyer's letter. With an effort he raised his eyes to his daughter's face, so frank and ingenious in its brilliant dark loveliness.

Again he said to himself, "If I only dared!"

"Yes? What is it?"

"I have forgotten," said William Burgot. "No matter; I may remember it perhaps by-and by."

As he rose from his seat something fluttered to the ground; it was a draft for two hundred and fifty pounds, sent by the the lawyers, who had taken the liberty to assume that their esteemed client would be glad to have a little ready money.

As his uneasy fingers closed upon the first fruits of his good fortune, sudden resolution strengthened the corners of his mouth; and he registered a silent vow that only in dire extremity should that treacherous memory of his be quickened.

* * * * * * * * * * * *

In an oriel window at Burgot Grange two women were standing. They might have been "two sisters of one race," so juvenile were they both in appearance. Mrs. Robert Burgot, who must have been very near her fortieth birthday, delighted to remember that within the last eighteen months she had twice been reminded of "that charming waltz you gave me at the Hunt Ball, Miss Dallas," the waltz in question having been accorded by the other lady, Clara Dallas, the daughter of her first marriage.

They possessed certain points in common which conduced to their marked resemblance and helped to mitigate the elder's seniority.

Both dyed their hair the fashionable golden tint, and called the process "bleaching." Both had slim, graceful figures. Both had good complexions, tiny features, pale, washed-out eyes, and were insipidly but decidedly pretty. Both had very small hands, which were generally well gloved, and very small feet, which were generally shod to perfection. Both spoke in voices which never rose above an intelligible murmur. Both prided themselves upon their excessive good-breeding, and both would rather have violated one of the Ten Commandments than have been guilty of a social solecism, or transgressed one of the unwritten ordinances of English society. Both were caressingly affectionate in manner, and both were hypocritical.

"It is twelve minutes," said Mrs. Robert, consulting a diminutive gold watch, "since we saw the white smoke of the train wreathing through the valley. In three minutes the travellers will arrive. Dear Clara, I do hope we shall be able to make a favorable impression upon them."

THE LONDON JEWISH PRESS ON THE REVISED VERSION.

The Jewish Chronicle regards the New Testament in a measure as a branch of Jewish Literature worthy of study equally with the Apocrypha and Philo. And all the great Jewish scholars of Germany are accustomed to deal with it in this manner using it as an authority for the customs and thoughts of Jews in the times in which it was written. But, as a matter of course, the New Testament has a further and more direct interest as the documentary foundation of the Christain religion, which claims to be a continuation and consummation of our own. From this point of view it is of interest to observe that the chief changes which a necessarily hasty perusal has brought to light tell in favor of Judaism in a long continued struggle between church and synagogue. Thus, the evidence for the Resurrection of Jesus is considerably weakened by the admission made in the marginal notes of the new version that the concluding verses of the Gospel of Mark are absent in the two oldest Greek manuscripts. The passage in John's Gospel about the three witnesses is wisely omitted, and a strong text for the doctrine of the Trinity thus removed. The Broad Church will be embarrassed to find the doctrine of a personal spirit of evil admitted into the Lord's Prayer. One of the most charming anecdotes about Jesus—His treatment of the woman taken in adultery—is now recognized to be a late interpolation, and this lends some strength to the conviction that many of the New Testament narratives are ben trovati. Throughout the addition of "Christ" to the name Jesus is said to be absent in the most trustworthy authorities, and the [illegible] origin of his claims to divinity is thus shown. The New version is in many ways an additional confirmation of the position Jews have always taken up in [reject]ing the extravagant claims of the [follo]wers of Jesus. The care and [illegible] with which it has been [illegible] [illegible] accomplishment of the still more difficult task entrusted to the Old Testament Revisers.

The Jewish World says: "Looking at the matter from an unprejudiced point of view, we can but regard the revision as a great mistake. It must not be forgotten that the authorized version of the New Testament holds a peculiar position among Anglo Christians. It is not regarded as the Old Testament is among the Jews. The vast majority of Christians rarely realise that the New Testament is a Greek book, and that the version they revere is but a rendering from another tongue. Textural criticism and differences of interpretation, the relative authenticity of different readings, are matters of which they have heard nothing. The new revision will bring home to them the many imperfections of the book they had always worshipped. It will place it before them in the same position as any other literary work of former times. It will force upon their convictions the fact that it requires treatment like other ancient documents, criticism and emendation and omission; that there are contradictory versions and irreconcilable differences; that there are words which it is admitted, have been left out, yet have a good claim to be kept. [illegible] Christians will find that saying [illegible] [illegible] youth and age, joy and suffering; phrases that have imbedded themselves in their literature; supposed utterances of Jesus himself, are not even found in authoritative copies of the Original. The revision will raise vague doubts, distractions and uncomfortable notions which can never again be allayed. In brief, the book hitherto surrounded as by a halo of divinity is reduced, by the mere fact that it admits of criticism, to the level of an ordinary work compared and revised and amended.

A ROPE OF WOMANS HAIR.

In his detail of Indian horrors that came under his notice, Mr. Markley, the New Mexico Indian killer, stated that in 1867 he gave an Indian half a dollar for a hair rope ten feet in length and about the size of his little finger. He untwisted the end and found that it was made of red, auburn and black hair, which, from the length of each hair, was evidently that of a woman. He questioned the Indian, who told him the rope was made from the hair of the women and girl whos were slain in the Mountain Meadows massacre for complicity with which murder Jno. D. Lee, the Mormon was tried and shot a few years ago. The place where he purchased the rope was at Paleronagote, sixty five miles from Mountain Meadow, where the most harrowing and brutal massacre of modern times occurred.—St. Louis Republican.

THE HUMAN TAIL.

It is intimated that the missing link between the man and the monkey has at length been found, and that there is in preparation for the museum at Rio de Janeiro, a human skeleton belonging to a race long since passed away, possessing peculiarities of structure not found in any race now living. What is most extraordinary about it is the prolongation of the spinal column into a tail twenty inches in length. This does not prove that the human species originally had tails, but it tends that way. What is wanted is something that will afford the world positive proof of what at present it has only presumptive evidence, and though the facts may possibly be against the theory that at some remote period of the world's history men had tails, the probabilities all tend to show that they were so favoured; and that tails were as much a portion of the human anatomy as arms an legs are now. The most distinguished scientists who have gone into this question readily admit that the human frame in lacking is one essential feature on account of the spinal column coming to an abrupt, premature and impotent conclusion. They claim that the human figure cannot be considered perfect so long as it lacks a tail. At what particular period in the history of the world tails first began to disappear we have no means of discovering. Every attempt to make that point clear has met with failure and vexations disappointment. It may be looked upon as being more than simply probable, however, that tails began to disappear from the human form shortly after chairs were invented, the constant friction of the tail with the chair gradually wearing the less brittle of the two substances down to the stub. This stub finally disappeared altogether, leaving hardly a vestige behind. There are those who take a slightly different view, while still retaining the chair theory, and attribute the loss of the human tail to the natural precipitancy and carelessness of mankind when about to sit down. They hold in brief that the human tail was not worn off by friction but was broken off by sudden contact. Thus, through the carelessness of their primary progenitors the people of the present age are compelled to go through life without even the semblance of a tail.—Toronto Telegram.

A $10,000 ROBBERY.

A HAUL MADE BY THREE THIEVES AT A NEW YORK RAILWAY DEPOT.

NEW YORK, July 15.—At 1.30 this afternoon an alarm was received at police head-quarters announcing the fact that three men, apparently peddlers, had stolen $10,000 in bills. Later it was ascertained that the money belonged to Jacob Ruppert, a brewer. His clerk, Charles Messersmidt, drove in a light waggon from the brewery, on 92nd street, to deposit the money in down town banks. With him was the office boy. They carried $9,800 in bills done up in a package and a bag filled with silver dollars. At 42nd street their waggon was run into by a vendor's waggon, in which three men were seated. The suppposed peddlers sprang from the waggon; two attacked the clerk, while the third cut the reins of the horse. In an instant they seized the package of bills, jumped back into their waggon, whipped up their horses, and drove furiously away. The bag of silver fell in the street. Messersmidt ran after the retreating robbers, but was compelled to give up the chase, as the thieves drove at fast [illegible]

We have received a communication from Mr. C. A. Owen, in answer to Mr. Brown's letter of last week, but as Mr. Owen did not see fit to face the accusations he made, we decline to publish it.

The Advance man lost a subscriber last week and he felt so bad about it that he saw fit to devote nearly quarter of a column to the abuse of the man who did not see fit to take his paper.

OUR Correspondent's letter came too late for this week's issue, as also the letter of "M." To insure insertion correspondence should reach us not later than Tuesday, as by the time the mail reaches us on Wednesday, we generally have all the necessary copy in hand repuired for the paper.

THAT article on the Thomas cat, in last weeks Flesherton Advance was truely brilliant. The funny men of the Detroit Free Press and Burlington Hawkeye will have to "brace up," or the Flesherton man will "knock 'em higher 'an a Kite."

Dr. Ryle, who is now Bishop of Liverpool, has addressed a fraternal letter to the Wesleyan Methodist Conference, thaking its members for their services in the cause of Christianity they have rendered to England. Time works great changes.

A MEETING of the Directors of the Glenelg Agricultural Society was held in the Revere House, on Wednesday, the 27th inst., when a prize list was made out, which will be printed in pamphlet form. Each member of the Society can obtain a copy by applyng to the Secretary. The fall show will be held in Markdale on Tuesday, October 4th. One Dollar will be the membership fee until Friday, the 29th inst., (to-day), after which $2 will be demanded.

UPON reading the leading article in last weeks issue of the Flesherton paper we labored under the impression that the learned individual, who wields the Editorial pen of that sheet, wished to insinuate that we wrote our own Flesherton correspondence under a nom de plume; but as he states in an other column that "Ratepayer hangs out at Flesherton Station, we must be in error. We would hear say for the information of that learned gentleman that whenever we have anything to say, we will not stoop to shield ourselves under a nom pe plume but come out boldly and give it, without any beating about the bush, and we wish the Flesherton man to do the same.

The editor of the Flesherton paper in its last issue accuses us of misrepresenting him as to the course he intended to pursue in regard to politics. We have not the first number of the Advance by us, and therefore are not positive as to what the editor said, consequently cannot say whether we are accused wrongfully. However the editor admits himself that he said nothing about politics, and that he in reality was on the fence, and was "riding a wee," to see on which side it would pay him best to get down on. As the Advance made no statement as to the course it intended to, pursue neither saying whether it was Tory, Grit, or Independent one would naturally suppose it meant to be nuetral, at least such was the inference we drew, and so stated. Had we known that he was astradle the fence, waiting the course of events, to see what party it would pay him best to serve, we would so have stated, and been only too happy to give him a helping hand. We can assure the worthy Editor, we have not the slightest antipathy to him, in fact don't care two pence about him—whether he is Grit, Tory, Independent, Canada First, or Neutral. The starting of the Advance has done us no harm, to tell the truth it has had quite a contrary effect. Our subscription list has increased and so great has been the increase in job work that we have had to put another man on, and this has been done without any puffing and blowing on our part, nor have we got other papers to puff us up, leaving our work to recommend its self.

We beg to assure the Advance we had not the slightest intention of misrepresenting it, we take it all back and admit you did not say you were non-policital, but that you realy did not know what you would be until you saw which party bid highest for your valuable services, and that after due delibration and considerable hesitation you think it will pay you best to get off the fence and become a Liberal Conservative.

The Thornbury Standard has a stiring article anent the tax sales advertising, and we heartily agree with the editor in saying that it is a crying shame that something has not been done to remedy the evil.

We believe that many a farm has been lost to its original owner from the fact that these lands have been always advertised in one paper only at the extreme end of the county, and as a consequence never seen by four-fifths of those most deeply interested. We maintain that everychance should be given the orignal owner to redeem his property, by having it advertised in the paper nearest the locality where the land is situated. By the present method it might as well be advertised in the Manitowaning Expositor.

We notice from the same paper that the Council of Collingwood township are moving in the matter and are determined to have the lands advertised in the local paper. All honor to them, and we sincerely hope that other townships will follow their example. We feel satisfied that the outlay would not be grumbled at by the ratepayers. As the Union Standard, says the cost would be but trifling, and would be repaid a hundred fold.

Correspondence.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood, that we do not hold ourselves reponsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

SIR,—In reference to Mr. Douglass' communication anent the Glenelg Agricultural Society, which appeared in your issue of the 15th inst., please allow me space for a few remarks. For the sake of brevity I shall address myself directly to that gentleman.

Now, Mr. Douglass, for a quiet talk. You appear Sir to be out of temper and think by an exhibition of anger and the free use of bad language to silence further criticism. In this you are quite mistaken. Do you suppose that getting angry is any sign of innocence? Why no; quite the reverse. You will remember that Mr. Lyons got in a "towering rage" and threatened all manner of vengeance upon those who first dared to suggest that something was wrong with his accounts, yet the investigation revealed the fact that over one hundred and fifty dollars of the Society money had found its way into the wrong pocket. Come, come, William, this getting angry may be very convenient, but it won't do; people don't frighten so readily. You say "if your cor. is manly enough to come to me &c., I shall be happy to afford him or any other member of the society any information I can, &c." Umph! Now, seriously, Mr. D., do you think that this "hole and corner" sort of business would satisfy the public? No, no! a thorough investigation by a committee duly appointed by the society will alone suffice. None of your "star chamber" humbugs. Do you suppose the public are concerned to know who "Cinna" is? (not "Cisma" as incorrectly printed) or to know that Mr. Douglass was Treasurer during those years? "Office don't make the man"!

What the public want to know, and what they have a right to demand is —Has the money been properly accounted for? No matter who was Treasurer. Never mind the "coward's cloak" or the "treachery and meanness"; these terms are simply "dust" to throw in peoples' eyes.

Come, William submit your books to investigation—nay, demand an investigation, and thus forever allay suspicion and put and end to cavil.

LOCAL ITEMS.

A garden party will be held at Rev. N. A. McDiarmid's on the evening of the 8th August. Full particular next week.

MR. Joseph McLeod returned on Wednesday from Manitoulin Island, where he has been on a visit for the past two weeks, and informs us that the crops are looking excellent on the Island, and the more he sees of the place the better he likes it.

Try Doll's for a good razor, very cheap, also a quantity of nice butter knives, very low.

BENSON has nearly completed re building his store that colapsed a short time since, and has also added to its length together with an addition to the store occupied by himself, which makes a decided improvement in its appearance.

For a good Gold or Silver watch try W. F. Doll, Flesherton & Dundalk.

Mr. T. Mullarkey showed us some stalks of wheat, pulled from a 9 acre field belonging to James Carter, Glenelg, which measured over 4 feet 6 inches. The straw looks strong and healthy and the heads appear full at a distance, but closer examination discloses the fact that it is badly attacked by the midge.

For a real good clock try W. F. Doll, Flesherton & Dundalk.

ACCIDENT.—On Sunday afternoon as Mr. C. Fox and Chas. Anderson were driving from the latter's carriage house to the street the horse took fright and ran away, dashing the buggy against a telegraph pole and throwing the occupants violently out. Mr. Fox sustained several slight bruses and a cut on the forehead; Mr. Anderson was badly brused about the face and head, and is still confined to his bed. The buggy was badly broken up.—Tribune.

STILL ANOTHER COMET.

ANOTHER CELESTIAL VISITOR APPROACHING THE EARTH—A TOTAL NEW COMET.

ROCHESTER, N. Y., July 23.—Professor Swift saw Schueberelo's comet this morning with the naked eye. It rises earlier every night, and will soon be visible in the evening sky. The tail is about one degree long. The comet is coming directly toward the earth on its way to perihelion, the passage of which will be made about August 18th. It will be twenty-five times brighter than when first seen. Swift thinks it is an entirely new comet.

BOSTON, July 23.—The observers at Cambridge do not think the new comet is that of 1887, and doubt if it will prove a comet of which there is any record.

THE CANADIAN RIFLE TEAM AT WIMBLEDON.

[From the Toronto Mail.]

LONDON, July 21.

This afternoon the Canadian camp at Wimbledon was the scene of quite a gay and fashionable gathering. The Duke of Cambridge had expressed a wish to see the team parade, and a distinguished company came to see him and do honour to the Canadians. Among those who were present were the Earl of Kimberly, Colonial Secretary; Sir John Macdonald, Sir John Rose, Sir Garnet Wolsely, Right Hon. W. H. Smith, Col. Gibson, commandant of the team, and others. After having inspected and spoken to the Canadians individually, His Royal Highness congratulated the team on its success in having won the Kolapore cup on the previous day. He said that he was really very much gratified at their having obtained it. He and all Englishmen were gratified at the success and prosperity of the great country they represented, and the fact that they had secured this prize, although rather humiliating in one respect, was still a cause of congratulation, because it showed that the contest had been as fair, frank, and above-board as it could be. He hoped that their success would stimulate them in coming to Wimbledon again and again, and that eventually one among them would succeed in carry off the great prize of the meeting, the Queen's prize. The number of their members who got into the first sixty in the competition for that prize, he said, showed that rifle shooting was improving in Canada, and that they might yet bring over the lucky man who would carry off that honour.

The Earl of Kimberly said that last year he had the pleasure of visiting the Canadian team, but on this occasion it was more gratifying because they were successful in the truest sense. They were all proud of the progress of the Dominion in art science, and commerse, but more especially on an occasion of this kind they were extremely proud of the measures which they had taken for their own defence. There was nothing which consolidated a community more, or added more to its dignity or self-respect, than that it should provide for the defence of the country. In doing so they were providing for the defence of the British empire. It had given him much pleasure to be again among his Canadian friends, including Sir John Macdonald.

Col. Gibson said that a couple of years ago Sir John Rose had been pleased to give a sum of £500 for a prize to the Dominion Rifle Association, and that the donor would now present it.

Sir John Rose, in doing so, referred to the fact that his Royal Highness the Duke of Cambridge had honoured the Canadian team with a visit every year in which it had come to England. Canada had, with great spirit and sacrifice, provided for her self-defence. He believed it was beginining now to be understood that the reserve power of the country was in the power and loyalty of the Canadian people. It was well known that the Canadians possessed the essential elements that constitute soldiers. They were inured to hardship, needed little commissariat, and were trained to the use of the rifle from boyhood. Their success in winning the Kolapore cup was very gratifying. He hoped that he would live to see the day when the Canadians would carry off the Queen's prize. Should it ever be so, they would find that the winner would receive the commendations of all.

SIR JOHN MACDONALD'S ADDRESS.

Sir John Macdonald said that it had made his heart glow that morning on reading that the Canadians had won the Kolapore cup. It was a gallant fight. After years of defeat the Canadians had had luck again. He congratulated the team, especially Col. Gibson, on their success. Although he sympathized with the English team, yet he thought they could afford the Canadians an occasional victory. They were all of one race, under one common allegiance, and if there should be any rivalry between the militia and volunteers of Canada and England, it should be as to who could be most loyal. It was gratifying to find that their progress and the efficiency of the militia forces were being steadily watched by the Commander in chief of her Majesty's forces. Their militia would not desire to be considered a mere holiday force. He believed if the time should come when England was involved in war, Canada would do her fair share man for man in fighting for the common cause and common flag. He should go back to Canada and tell the people how proud he was this day, and how the victorious team had been honoured by his Royal Highness and by the Colonial Minister. He hoped that this year's victory would not be lost. Canada would have to fight for it, and must send as good a team every year.

AUGUST

The summer season now reaches its climax, and is prolific in developing bowel complaints. Over-indulgence in fruit, immoderate drinking of iced waters and summer beverages, in a few houres prouced fatal ravages among children and adults. Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry is the most reliable remedy for all forms of summer complaints. Safe, pleasant and prompt in its effects. All dealers keep it.

AS OTHERS SEE US.

MARKDALE.—On Saturday last we paid a short visit to Markdale and were surprised to notice the great improvement made in the appearance of the village in three years time. Several very handsome brick blocks of stores have been erected, and 6 more stores are in course of construction. A novel feature in the new buildings is the artificial stone—made of sand, cement and lime, which has the hardness and durability of fine grained free stone, and moulded in various forms. This stone is used for door jams, window sills, key stones for arches, etc., and is said to cost less than a third of what stone costs. Mr. A. McIntyre has removed into a commodious brick store just erected by Dr. Sproule, and next door to Butter & Rae. Mr. Rutledge of the Standard is going to put up a brick building for a printing office. Mr. T. Sproule, formerly of the T. G. & B. R. is doing a good business and becoming very popular among the travelling public.—Grey Review.

HUGGED AGAINST HIS WILL.

A most ludicrous scene transpired in a place not a thousand miles from the city of Louisville one night the other week, and although a little annoying to the parties concerned, was just so innocent and funny that we cannot refrain from giving the general outlines, suppressing names of course. Two sprightly and beautiful young ladies were visiting their cousin, another sprightly and beautifuly young lady, who like her guests, was of age that turns everything into fun and merriment. If the truth were told, we fear that we should have to record that these three misses were just a bit fast. They were fond of practical jokes and were constantly playing tricks on each other. All three occupied a room on the ground floor and cuddled up together in bed.

Two of the young ladies attended a party on the night in question, and did not get home until 11.30 o'clock. As it was late they concluded not to disturb the household; so they quietly slipped into their room thro the low, open window.

In about half an hour after they left for the party, a young Methodist minister called at the house where they were staying and craved a night's lodging, which was of course granted. As ministers always have the best room, the young lady (Fannie) who had not gone to the party was entrusted with the duty of sitting up for the absent onesand informing them of the change of rooms.

She took up her post in the parlor, and as the night was sultry, sleep overcame her and she departed on an excursion to the land of dreams.

We will now return to the young ladies who had gone to their room through the window. By the dim light of the moonbeams, as they strugled through the curtains, the young ladies were enable to descry the outlines of Fannie, as they supposed ensconsed in the middle of the bed. They saw more—to wit, a pair of boots. The truth flashed upon them at once. They saw it all. Fannie had set the boots in the room to give them a good scare. They put their heads together and determined to turn the tables on her. Silently they disrobed and stealthily as cats they took up their positions on each side of the bed. At a given signal they both jumped into bed, one on each side ofthe unconscious parson, laughing and screaming, "Oh, what a man!" They gave the poor bewildered minister such a genuine hugging and tussling as few parsons are able to brag of in the course of a lifetime.

The noise of the proceedings awoke the old lady, who was sleeping in an adjoining room. She comprehended the situation in a moment, and rushing to the room, she opened the door exclaimed: "Gracious, galls, it is a man, sure enough.

There was one prolonged consolidated scream, a flash of muslin through the door, and all was over.

The best of the joke is that the minister took the whole thing in earnest. he would listen to no apologies the old lady could make for the girls. He would hear no excuse, but solemnly folded his official robs about him, and silently stole away.

Querry—Was he mad at the girls or—at the old lady.

A CHURCH CONTRIBURION.

"How much is the ante?" whispered a Red Gulch miner with a single $20 gold piece to the deacon with the collection plate in the Babtist Church at Black Rar, Col. He was told to contribute what ever he chose, whereupon he said he'd chil in a dollar, and proceeded to take $19 change. The deacon softly replied that no change was given. A struggle ensued, the plate was upset, and the congregation were in the act of "jumping the deacon's claim," when the minister, an old californian, leaned over the pulpit with a large navy revolver, and observed. "The brethren will please take notice that I've got the drop on them, and any brother who decline to go to his seat or who touches any of that money will have a funeralat his house to-morrow at 2 o'clock p. m. Our mining friend from Red Gulch will kindly release the deacon's throat, or he is a dead man. The $20 gold piece went to save the heathen.

A LUNATIC'S FREAK.

A WELL-TO-DO FARMER, LOCKED UP FOR INSANITY, SETS FIRE TO HIS CELL.

LINDSAY, July 15.—A man named Andrew Egelston, who lives in the township of Cavan, was this morning put in a lock-up on a charge of insanity. He had been wandering about the streets all night, and had by some means fallen into the river. Shortly after being put in the lock-up he set fire to his straw hat, which in turn ignited the sides of the cell. As soon as the fire was discovered the brigade turned out and extinguished it, not, however, untill the cell was considerably burned, and Egelston was somewhat scorched and nearly suffocated. He is quite a well to-do farmer in Cavan, and has friends there, to whom he was sent.

THE storm of Sunday night has done a vast amount of damage to crops and buildings through Ontario. The standing grain has been badly laid, and a number of barns and houses have been destroyed by lightning.

East Grey Agricultural Society will hold their Fall show, on the 6th and 7th of October in Flesherton.

ARE YOU GOING TO TRAVEL?

Don't forget a supply of that Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry. It is a superior remedy for sea sickness, and a positive cure for all bowel complaints induced by bad water, change of diet, or of climate. Whether at home or abroad, it should be kept at hand in case of emergency.

Mr. Peter Harris, of Euphrasia, brought us in a bunch of Timothy hay, which he pulled out of a field of six acres measuring 5 feet 6 inches. Mr. H. tells us that the yield will be over an average and is very uniform throughout.

NO HOSPITAL NEEDED.—No palatilal hospital needed for Hop Bitters patients, nor large salaried talented puffers to tell what Hop Bitters will do or cure, as they tell their own story by their certain and absolute cures at home.—New York Independent.

On Wednesday, Aug. 3rd, a meeting of the Presbytery will be held in the Presbyterian Church at McIntyres Corners, at 10,30 a. m. At 2 p. m., of the same day the ordination and induction of the Rev. Mr. Chisholm will take place. The congregation purpose holding a social in the evening.

A UNITED meeting of the Presbyterian Congregation of Markdale and Flesherton, will be held in the Methodist Church, Flesherton, on Monday next, August the 1st at 2 p. m., for the purpose of moderating in a "call" to a minister of said Congregation.

NATURE MAKES NO MISTAKES.

Nature's own remedy for bowel complaints, cholera morbus, cholic, cramps, vomiting, sea sickness, cholera infantum, diarrhœa, dysentery, and all diseases of a like nature belonging to the summer season, is Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, which can be obtained of all dealers in medicine.

The "American Agriculturist" for August is to hand. Its contents are varied, useful and entertaining. It is a work that should be in the hands of every Farmer, Gardener, and Florist. price $1,50 per annum. Subscriptions taken at this office, where specimen numbers may be seen.

One half of Brooklyn is tickled with joy because it has been proven that Guiteau belonged to Beecher's church and not to Talmage's, and the other half of the city is gloomy for the same reason.

We have had considerable rain the past few days which will be of great benefit to the root crops. The hay, barley, and fall wheat, which is being, harvested in many parts of Ontario, will, we fear be somewhat damaged.

TOO MANY LOVERS.—Sunday night there was considerable disturbance on Cannon street. Two men were smitten with the charms of one female, and got into an altercation as to who should see the lady home. One of them, a bus-driver for one of the leading hotels, became very angry, and used rather strong language, and the affair culminated in his arrest, and he saw his rival walk off with the girl.—Spectator.

The Duke of Athol, who is at present on a visit to Manitoba and the Northwest, is stated to have said at Winnipeg the other day, that he should return to Scotland a sadder and a wiser man; that since he had seen the Canadian Northwest, he did see how it was possible for British tenants to compete with the people of Canada, and he saw nothing for it but a reduction of rents all round.—Score one Canada.

ALTHOUGH we have not got a brick yard in our Village, yet, nevertheless, so brisk are building operations, that men are not to be had to enable the contracts to complete their contracts on time.

We learn that Mr. Gould has let a contract for six dwelling houses.—This will supply a want long felt to certain extent. For the past year many families have been prevented from coming to our Village from the fact that dwelling houses were not obtainable. Although buildings are going up in all directions, it is next to impossible to get a house to rent, for the reason they are bespoke six months ahead; and yet some people have the hardihood to say that Markdale is not progressing.

THE BEST REMEDY

FOR

Diseases of the Throat and Lungs.

AYER'S

CHERRY

PECTORAL.

In diseases of the pulmonary organs a safe and reliable remedy is invaluable. AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL is such a remedy, and no other so eminently merits the confidence of the public. It is a scientific combination of the medicinal principles and curative virtues of the finest drugs, chemically united, of such power as to insure the greatest possible efficiency and uniformity of results. It strikes at the foundation of all pulmonary diseases, affording prompt relief and rapid cures, and is adapted to patients of any age or either sex. Being very palatable, the youngest children take it readily. In ordinary Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat, Bronchitis, Influenza, Clergyman's Sore Throat, Asthma, Croup, and Catarrh, the effects of AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL are magical, and multitudes are annually preserved from serious illness by its timely and faithful use. It should be kept at hand in every household for the protection it affords in sudden attacks. In Whooping-cough and Consumption there is no other remedy so efficacious, soothing, and helpful.

Low prices are inducements to try some of the many mixtures, or syrups, made of cheap and ineffective ingredients, now offered, which, as they contain no curative qualities, can afford only temporary relief, and are sure to deceive and disappoint the patient. Diseases of the throat and lungs demand active and effective treatment; and it is dangerous experimenting with unknown and cheap medicines, from the great liability that these diseases may, while so trifled with, become deeply seated or incurable. Use AYER'S CHERRY PECTORAL, and you may confidently expect the best results. It is a standard medical preparation, of known and acknowledged curative power, and is as cheap as its careful preparation and fine ingredients will allow. Eminent physicians, knowing its composition, prescribe it in their practice. The test of half a century has proven its absolute certainty to cure all pulmonary complaints not already beyond the reach of human aid.

THE TEN Insurance Commandments.

1. Thou shalt insure thy real and personal estate and all that thou hast against fire, for—

Defending thyself from misfortune until old age,
Thy happiness shall equal thy wisdom.

2. Thou shalt not insure more than thou dost possess, for insurance is a business wherein thou canst make money. This is simply thy duty in order to preserve what thou hast acquired.

Preserve that which thou shalt acquire;
Whoso is prudent guardeth his goods.

3. Thou shalt not insure less than thou dost possess—for what thou dost not insure, will not be paid in case of loss.

Though poverty is not a vice
To lose all is not a pleasure.

4. Thou shalt not make excessive declarations of value respecting thy property in case of fire; but thou shall state truly that which belongs to thee, that thou mayest not have a lawsuit or gain a bad reputation

As we make our bed so must we lie.

5. Thou shalt also exhort thy neighbors, thy friends, and thy relations to insure themselves, that they may escape loss, and that poverty through a loss by fire be not laid to thy charge.

That which comes by the flute goes by the drum.

6. Thou shalt not backslide, nor hinder thy neighbor from making all these insurances, for those who are so improvident as not to insure are those who are most visited with losses; no one pities their condition.

Those that are beaten pay the fine.

7. Thou shalt not search for evasion to get rid of the expense of insurance, for it is low in proportion to thy position; thou canst put by as much as the value of the bottles of drinkest, and thou wilt then have sufficient for all thy insurance.

The pitcher that goes often to the well must in the end be filled.

8. Thou shalt regard the expense of insurance like the expense of thy meat and drink; and as thou canst not do without these, because thou hast hunger and thirst thou shalt not more hesitate about insurance, because it will give thee security, repose, consolation, and aid.

In thirst and misfortune
A pear in reserve is a pleasure.

9. Thou shall be careful when thou insurest that thou selectest a reliable and safe company and that the agent is an honest one, because in so doing in case of a loss thy money shall not be paid for nought, and if thou lose thy property and not get thy insurance thou will be poorer than a church rat.

If thou fallest into poverty
People will care but little for thee.

10. Thou shalt do all thy insurance with Robert Davis, the Conveyancer and Land and Insurance Agent at Flesherton, for—

He represents only the best companies, and
He guards well his patrons' interests.

Conveyancer, Commissioner in B. R., Real Estate, Loan, and Estate Agent, Flesherton

THE NATIVE MICHIGANDER.

I have been studying him for a week. About 7 o'clock every evening he comes in from his farm and takes a seat beside me on the verandah of the country hotel. No one introduced us. He came stumping along the first evening, flung down his old straw hat and exclaimed:

"Durn my hide if it isn't durn hot!"

I had been roasting all day, and so I struck hands with him at once. He has never asked whether I was the Duke of Sutherland or a railroad switchman, and I have never asked why he didn't cut his hair, shave off his matted whiskers and fix a tin spout in one corner of his mouth to accommodate the flow of tobacco juice.

The native Michigander is a good fellow at heart, but he has his eccentricities.

"Yes, I struck this State over fifty years ago," he said to me the other evening, as he hunted in his hind pocket for his plug tobacco, "I've heard the wolves howl, and b'ars roar, and the panthers scream."

"You have, eh?"

"You bet I have! Yes, sir, and I've lived all winter on acorns, slept all summer on a tree top, and walked forty-two miles through the woods to prayer meeting."

"Then you must be pious?"

"Pious? Durn my old hide to ballyhack and gosh all the fish hooks to thunder, but I rayther recon I am! Pious? Why, how in thunder and blazes and tea kettles could I have borne up if I hadn't been pious! Say, did you ever live in the woods forty miles from the nearest human hyena, black or white?"

"Never."

"Did you ever have to go barefooted in snow four feet deep?"

"No."

"Ever shake with the ager right along for 281 days, Sundays included?"

"No."

"Dod rot your pampered countenance, of course you never did! What did you ever do towards making Michigan the great and glorious State she now is?"

"Well, I've run a law mower."

"Run a thunder to blazes! How many acres of forest do you 'spose I've cut down?"

"Two."

"Two! Why you onery hyena, my old woman has slashed down over forty herself, and she's left handed at that! I calkerlate, sir—I solemnly calkerlate that I've cleared off at least 500 acres of the toughest kind of forest. Ah! sir, but you petted and pampered children of luxury little dream of what us natives had to endure. How much tea do you suppose I had in my house the first ten years of our pioneer life?"

"Twenty-five chests."

"Twenty-five Thunders!" he roared as he hunted for more plug, "we had just two drawings and no more!"

"Couldn't you get trusted at the corner grocery?"

"Get trusted! Corner grocery! Why, you infernal young lunatic, wasn't I located forty miles from the grocery! That's what I've been telling you all along. Old pioneers couldn't afford sich luxuries as that. How much do you 'spose our outfit cost us for house keeping?"

"Perhaps $5,000, but that's according to the style of your carpets, piano and paintings. Did you have lace curtains hung on poles?"

He jumped up and down like a man with a piece of beefsteak in his wind pipe, and I thought he was a goner. However, after a higher jump than his crooked old legs seemed capable of he blurted out:

"You infernal durned fool, but we didn't have nothing that we couldn't carry on our backs. Do you 'spose we was a foolin' around with pianers out there in the vargin wilderness. Lace curtains hung on poles. Not much! If I'd had a spare shirt on a pole I'd have been perfectly satisfied. None of you spiled children of luxury kin have any idea of how we had to get along in them old days."

"I presume not."

"One winter when the old woman was sick I had nothing to feed her but salt coon and corn dodgers."

"Oyster soup would have been nice."

"Oyster thunder! Who knew anything about oysters fifty years ago? Don't I keep telling you that I was fifty miles in the woods?"

"Yes but why didn't you get out?"

"Git out? what fur?"

"Why you might hav got out and lived on your mother-in-law and had a trotting horse, a plug hat, a diamond pin and high living. You were foolish to stay in the woods, where you had no ward caucuses, or military parades, or circus processions, or ginger beer or banana puddings."

We generally end here. The old native chokes and gasps and jumps up and down and kicks his hat into the street and goes away saying:

"Them durned pampered idiots of luxury wouldn't keer two cents if the hull State was growed up to jack-pines so thick that a rabbit could't squeeze through"

But next night he comes again to wrestle me for the championship.—M. Quad.

A MOTHER'S DEVOTION.

A very peculiar case of a mother's devotion to her son, a manic, has just come to light. About eighteen years ago a family named Harrington moved to Portsmouth, R. I. Nearly four fears after, a son, William, then about ten years of age, suddenly disappeared. About three weeks ago the mother of the boy died. Some of the people at her funeral heard a strange noise, and, on going to a small, dark room in the attic, found there a young man, havig scarcely any clothing, covered with hair. The husband of the woman told the following story: The young man, he said, was his son, who had mysteriously disappeared so many years ago. When about two years old the boy became insane, and soon was a raving maniac. The mother refused to let him be taken from her, but placed him in an attic room, where at times she was compelled to tie him. During all these years he had been confined there, and the mother was the only living person whom her son had seen. She was accustomed to visit him and feed him, with her own hand, and had jealously guarded her secret from the neighbors, fearing that steps would be taken to tear the boy away from her. When she died, the father attempted to follow her example, but was not equal to the task. Young Harrington has been removed to the insane asylum at Cranston, R. I.—Boston Journal.

SUN SPOTS.—Not since the great sun storms of last fall has the sun's disk been so speckled as it is this week. Not far from the centere are two enormous groups of spots, each including one vast cavernous hole surrounded by many smaller ones. East of these groups the disk, over a broad space is covered with scattered spots of all sizes and intermingled with the crinkled lines of faculæ, which showed that tremendous disturbing forces are at work. Comets it is suspected sometimes throw the sun into a state of excitement bo stoning him with the meteors that belong to their trains. Whether the present comet has been making a target of the sun remains to be learned. But evidently it is not the kind of comet to refrain from such sport out of respect to the sun, judging from the way the Albany astromers saw it whisking its tail in the face of the North star.

GREAT ANNUAL
CLEARIG SALE,
AT THE
POST OFFICE STORE,
FLESHERTON.

In order to make room for heavy Spring Importations now arriving daily, I have decided reducing my present large and well selected and assorted stock of

GENAERAL DRY GOODS, FURS, MILLIERY,
Ready-Made Clothing,
BOOTS AND SHOES,
Hats, Caps and Groceries
TO THE LOWEST POINT POSSIBLE,
and in order to do so,
Will Sell at and Under COST,
FOR THE NEXT THIRTY DAYS.

The stock is all new, well bought, and well worth the attention of the closet buyers.
In GROCERIES you will find evrything of First-Class Value.
As I do not pursue the course of some of our windy Merchants of our neighboring Villages, of sending out numerous samples of cheap trash (with unscrupulous recommendations) outside our natural business relations, in order to impress the public that they are not properly treated by their more honorable dealers, and draw custom from the many.
You will find everything that I sell just as I represent it, and as good value as you can possibly get for your money anywhere, as I have always held that honorable dealing is the only true course for a business man.
My Groceries are all bought for strictly nett cash, consequently I can and will sell at

The Lowest Possible Prices!
For CASH and FARM PRODUCE
BUT NOT FOR CREDIT.

I have also in stock and for sale, a large quantity of
PURE SEED GRAIN!

Such as White Russian, Glasgow, Red Chaff, and other varieties of Spring wheat. Also Pure Clean Peas, Oats and Barley. Prime Timothy and Clover Seed; also Fresh Garden Seeds, and as it pays each and every Farmer to sow clean seed, you will make money by paying a few cents extra, and purchasing a good article.

I am now selling large quanties of
COARSE LAND SALT,
FOR MANURE,

Which will pay every Farmer Five Dollers for every one idveeted in it, and as I am anxious that every Farmer this locality and neighboring Townships shall try it, have decided in selling in five and barrel lots at the Lowest Cash Price laid down by the car direct from the Manufacturers, and bought for nett cash at Bottom Prices.

I would also intimate that my

VIOLA'S REVENGE.

By the Author of "My Lady's Husband," "A Waif's Fortune," "The Lady of Gordon Lea," &c.

"Dear mamma, the heartiness of our welcome and the sincerity of our congratulations will be sure to please."

Something in the tone, placid as it was, grated upon Mrs. Robert's ear and awakened uneasiness.

"It is of the utmost importance," she went on, "that we should continue to reside at Burgot Grange."

"Yes; it is such a delightfully lively residence—particularly in winter—immediately after the death of its late owner."

Mrs. Robert's uneasiness deepened.

"You would not like to be turned out of the Grange, to exchange such society as it offers for that which we might command, living upon our joint income in town or at a watering-place?"

"I do not know," said Clara slowly.

"Where would be your chance of winning Lord Armidale?"

"Just where it has rested for the last six months, whilst his lordship has been exploring Palestine."

"But you felt so sure of him, Clara."

"Just as I felt so sure of the wealth and position for which we have for five years played a weary, waiting game, and which passes at last into the possession of this Italian adventuress and her father."

"Clara—dear Clara—this is madness!"

"I know it. You need not fear, mamma, that, because I hate these interlopers, I shall fail to ingratiate myself with them. I can hear the wheels of the brougham. Let us go to the door to meet our beloved relatives and welcome them to the enjoyment of that which should have been our own."

CHAPTER V.

The travellers had been received with effusion; they had eaten, drunk, and the home-coming had been made pleasant to them.

William Burgot, who had been at first strangely embarrassed and ill at ease, found his tongue and his lost confidence after drinkidg a glass or two of choice vintages that had lain since his youth in the cellar of the Grange.

The amiable manners of his sister-in-law particularly commended themselves to him. He had lighted her bed-room candle, and he said "good-night" to her once. But he still held her hand in his, whilst he made a little speech expressive of gratification.

"I think it only right to tell you, Mrs. Burgot——"

"Call me Mrs. Robert; it sounds more brother-like," she interposed plaintively.

"Mrs. Robert—that I am agreeably surprised and delighted at the kind reception you and Miss Clara Dallas have accorded to my daughter and myself. I had feared that natural disappointment at the provisions of my late brother's will——"

The little hand he had made a prisoner squeezed his fingers slightly; its fellow raised to Mrs. Robert's eyes a square of embroidery, called by courtesy a handkerchief.

"I trust, William—I may call you William, may I not?—I trust misfortune will never render me unjust. I do not grudge you the good fortune which might have been mine. I have sufficient wealth for my own simple requirements and for Clara's. I have but one thing to regret."

"And what is that, Mrs. Robert?"

"The loss of a home. For five years William, I have been led to believe, by him who is gone, poor fellow, that in this house I should end my days. He made a will by which I was placed precisely in your present position, and Clara in that of dear Viola. We shall not feel the loss of fortune, but it will be a bitter wrench to leave the old home."

"Why should you leave it Mrs. Robert?"

The widow's white fingers fluttered a little in his detaining grasp, and she darted at him from her pale eyes as reproachful a look as they were capable of emitting.

"I trust you do not think, William, that, because Clara and I remained to welcome you to the Grange, and to order the household for a day or two until Viola has quite recovered from the fatigue of her journey and is able to relieve us of the responsibility, it is our intention to intrude upon your hospitality. No; our boxes are packed, and we are ready to depart the instant——"

"But why should you depart?" said William Burgot argumentatively. "The Grange is large enough for all of us, and it will be much more cheerful for an extra inmate or two. Viola must have somebody to chaperon her; in fact, we are both of us so ignorant, owing to long residence abroad, of the usages of English country-life, that it will be of inestimable service that some kind friend should point out mistakes and short-comings. You may not be aware, Mrs. Robert, that I once had, whilst serving in India, a mild attack of sunstroke, which left my memory very hazy concerning all prior events."

Mrs. Robert was not aware, but was intensely sympathetic, if the expression of her pretty face could be trusted.

Inwardly she was wondering why her brother-in-law confessed so sheepishly to this attack of sunstroke, as though it had been a crime. In her own mind she decided that the confession was only half-truth, behind which probably lay unrevealed some disgraceful escapade of the fellow's wild youth.

"I remember with perfect distinctness," continued William Burgot, "my courtship of Viola's mother, my marriage—in fact every event of the last twenty-one years. But of my boyhood, youth, and early manhood I retain but misty impressions, only a few of which are sufficiently clear to be reliable. I am haunted by two fears—the one is that I may offend old friends by failing to recognize their altered features, the other that I may, during long residence abroad, have forgotten the duties, privileges, and customs which attach to my present position as a wealthy English landowner."

"Neither of your bugbears is very formidable," smiled Mrs. Robert sweetly; and, as she spoke, she wondered at the earnestness of the man.

Great beads of sweat stood upon his brow, and his handsome features were pale with suppressed excitement. Was it possible, thought the widow, that the mild attack of Indian sunstroke had slightly turned the poor fellow's brain?

"Pardon me," he went on, "both of my bugbears are in my eyes most formidable. I want you to defend me from them, standing between me and them. Mrs. Robert, I want you to chaperon me as well as well as Viola. In offering to yourself and Miss Dallas a permanent home at the Grange, I am studying my own interests, believe me, rather than yours."

"Then all my objections are anticipated. We shall be very pleased to remain, William, provided that, after sleeping upon your offer, you do not repent it. Now I must run away, or I shall get no beauty-sleep—a thing women of my antiquity cannot afford to dispense with. Once more, good night."

Blowing him a kiss from the tips of her white fingers, Mrs. Robert swept gracefully from the room. Very jubilant was her face as she climbed the broad staircase, troubled only by a passing reflection that, by playing her cards still better, she might perhaps have won, not only free maintenance for herself and Clara, but also a slight addition to their income.

She paused by the young lady's door, thinking to impart the glad tidings. The sound of murmuring voices betokened that Clara was not alone. Then the widow sank gracefully to a kneeling position upon the soft mat by the door, and applying her little ear to the keyhole, listened long and intently. When she arose, there was a satisfied smile upon her lips and in her colourless eyes.

"Of course they are becoming the best of friends," she murmured, as she went softly along the corridor towards her own room. "Dear Clara knows on which side her bread is buttered, and will not exhibit to my niece the mood which alarms me. With care and tact, we may still reign at Burgot Grange as though it belonged to us. As for the present owner, he is handsome, he seems amiable, and I shall be able, I feel sure, to twist him round my finger. How vexations that, in this prejudiced country, a woman cannot marry her deceased husband's brother!"

* * * * * * * * * * * * *

Mrs. Robert's deceased husband's brother was at that instant a very absent-minded man.

He had resumed the chair from which he had risen to bid her "good night." At his elbow were a stand of liqueurs and a glass partly filled with potent spirit, to which he had not yet added the complement of water.

Between his lips was a cigar which he had unconsciously, after a few whiffs, permitted to go out, whilst in his right hand he held the stalk of a consumed fuzee, regarding it with eyes that saw not.

"I should like to look at the old home," said William Burgot, thoughtfully.

He consulted his watch; the hands pointed to eleven o'clock. He went to the window, and, drawing aside the curtains, watched a white moon rising in a jewelled dome. Relighting his cigar, and emptying at a draught that partly-filled glass of potent spirit, William Burgot passed into the hall and began to don a thick overcoat before the eyes of the wondering butler, who was so astonished that he forgot to assist him.

"I am going out of doors to smoke my cigar," said William Burgot. "I shall return in half an hour or so."

"You must be careful not to lose yourself," answered the butler respectfully. Recalling some of the late owner's eccentricities, he had begun to tell himself that such freaks as these must be expected of every Burgot.

"Lose myself?" said his master. I know every inch of this whole estate, man, as well as you know the pimples on your face."

"Beg pardon, sir, I'm sure," rejoined the butler humbly.

He was vexed to the soul at that allusion to his pimples; and, having opened and closed the outer door, he went into the servants' hall and abused a sleepy footman with virulence. Meanwhile William Burgot, passing round the Grange, struck into its background of woods, with assurance which proved that his boast of knowing every inch of the old estate was no idle one.

It did not occur to him that this knowledge might be difficult to reconcile with the haziness of his memory concerning all events prior to his attack of sunstroke.

By winding rarely-trodden ways, under bare black branches gloomily out-lined against a gloomy sky, across open grassy glades upon which the hoar-frost sparkled in the moonlight, went the master of Burgot Grange, the proud possessor of estates yielding a rent-roll of fifteen thousand pounds per annum, until he came to a cottage in the wood—a cottage that was little better than a heap of ruins.

A low wall, moss-grown and broken down, surrounded it. William Burgot remembered—in spite of the mental haziness incidental to sunstroke—that it had once enclosed a garden, in which gooseberries and currants and cherries grew prodigally, but in which the rabbits made sad havoc amongst lettuces and broccoli. A smokeless ivy-covered chimney stood up against the sky. William Burgot remembered how the white wreaths from a wood fire used to curl out of it, and how the ivy had not climbed half so high.

In the cottage wall was a gaping hole which the ivy vainly tried to fill. William Burgot remembered that it had once been a diamond-paned window, from which a checkered, loving face, with a sweet perpetual refined softness upon it, had been wont to gaze wistfully.

He turned away. There was no stinging wintry wind to make his eyes water, there was no dusty summer breeze to make them smart; yet William Burgot drew the back of his hand across them. Could it be to brush away a tear?

Then he turned from the ruined cottage and the memories which the Indian sunstroke had not dimmed, and went back, with a faltering step, by the lonely rarely trodden ways to his proud position, his stake in the county, his lordship of Burgot Grange, and his rent-roll of fifteen thousand pounds.

CHAPTER VI.

In the Vye Valley there is a little meandering brook which runs babbling and singing from its birthplace far away amongst the hills. It is an uncertain little brook, capricious as a woman, never knowing its own mind.

Now it is shallow and swift, now deep and sluggish, now it goes straight as an arrow for two hundred yards, as though its immediate intent was to mate itself without delay with that most beautiful of rivers, the English Rhine; now it flies off at a tangent and shilly-shallies here and there postponing the inevitable union for a mile or two. But with all its inconsistencies, trout and grayling love it; and old Isaac Walton might, with great contentment, have thought out a few chapters of his Complete Angler beside its shallow reaches and shady pools.

One of his disciples was strolling along its banks this bright July morning. He was a man in a shooting-coat and knickerbockers of brown velveteen; his shoulders were broad and his legs shapely; and, if he had tried to make himself look like a keeper, the attempt was a dead failure.

If Claude, Lord Armidale, donned the rags af the filthiest beggar who ever tramped along the high roads of Great Britain, he would still look an aristocrat.

He had half filled his basket, although he had, at starting, grumbled like a Briton to the boy who carried his landing-net that the water was too clear and the wind was not in the right quarter.

But he had reached the last of his mortgaged acres, and did not like the notion of "trying back" again, although a board warned him concisely that "Poachers and tresspassers will be imprisoned without the option of a fine."

"I think I will take my chance of that," commented Lord Armidale gravely; then a vision of the embarrassment of his brother-magistrates when he should appear before them as a poacher and a tresspasser, caused his blue eyes to laugh for an instant.

The vision faded, and the silent laugh died out all too suddenly. Those blue eyes of his, which Viola had once likened to Italian skies or the shifting waters of the bay, were sadder than in the old days when he had lain down at her feet amongst the wild flowers and tangled weeds to spend an idle hour.

There was little other change in him to tell that five years had come and gone since then.

Perhaps the gold in his hair was a shade darker, his face a shade more sunburnt than of yore. Perhaps his broad chest was a shade deeper and may be a stone in weight had been added to that lean muscular frame.

"The new man seems a decent fellow," pursued Lord Armidale, in meditation, as he threw his fly with practised celerity within a small expanding circle in the centre of which a great fish had just risen. "I must return his call this afternoon, and suggest a mutual understanding that we fish each other's waters. Ah, I thought so!"

The ejaculation was one of triumph. The great fish, espying that tiny marvel of silk and feathers alighting within a foot of his nose, had come at it with a greedy, open-mouthed eagerness, and, as he dived for his cool shady retreat amongst the roots, was brought back, almost without a struggle, to the surface.

Then a contest began, which drove all thoughts of afternoon calls from the fisherman's mind for the next five minutes, and which ended in a material addition to the weight of the morning's spoils, after which the angler returned to the contemplations which were incompatible with the more active experiences of his recreation.

"I must call and renew my acquaintance with 'dear Clara.' I wonder whether a trout knows sometimes the exact intentions of the biped on the bank, and goes examining with sheer supercilious curiosity, and nothing more, every cunning bait that is thrown to him, until, he never quite realizes how, he is artfully struck and landed. Upon my soul I am not quite sure whether 'dear Clara' would not have landed me, had I not fled quite beyond sight of the flies she threw. Confound it all! I missed that fellow—all Clara's fault. Try it again, my finny friend."

KNEW WHEN TO QUIT.

"I think I may be excused for a little show of pride in saying that I knew when to quit Wall street," he observed as an elevated train carried them over the great thoroughfare.

"So you used to speculate, eh?"

"Yes, I was on the street for seven years."

"Made your pile, I suppose?"

"Yes, I made and lost money the same as the rest. At one time I could draw my check for $98,000, and that isn't so bad for a man who went into Wall street with only forty dollars in his pocket."

"and you knew when to quit?"

"Yes, sir."

"That was when—when?"

"That was when I had enough left to pay my fare to Elmira and hire a boy to carry my satchel up to my father-in-law's house," was the quiet reply.

SINGLE VS. MARRIED SOLDIERS.

It has long been a mooted point whether single or married men make the best soldiers.

Some maintain that the lack of wife and family tends to make a man more reckless of his life—therefore a good soldier.

Others say that the married man is almost a veteran when he enters the ranks, being inured to combat—therefore a good soldier.

In the recent Tunisian campaign a colonel was questioned upon this.

"Both are right," said he. "Look yonder—do you see that battalion of happy, devil-may-care fellows! They are all single men, and they would take their lives in their hands. But look again—do you see those taciturn, sombre, gloomy looking men there? They are all married, and in a hand to hand fight they are terrors."

"What is the name of the battalion?" asked the inquirer.

They are called," said the colonel, gravely, "the Children of Despair."

NO HOSPITAL NEEDED.—No palatial hospital needed for Hop Bitters patients, nor large salaried talented puffers to tell what Hop Bitters will do or cure, as they tell their own story by their certain and absolute cures at home.—New York Independent.

"I did hear dat ar sermon, and I was mightily impressed wid it."

"Yeer don't realize de troof cb it, Jim"

"Yes I does realize it, Uncle Mose. I realize it so much dat I has made up my mind to quit stealing chickens rest in peace and turn all my 'tentions to turkeys and ducks."

JULY.

During this month summer complaints commence their ravages. To be forewarned is to be forearmed. Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry is the best known preventative and cure for all forms of bowel complaints and sickness incident to the summer season.

FUNNY SCENE ON AN ACCOMMODATION TRAIN.

A very amusing incident occured on a Fort Wayne railway lately. Just before one of the accommodation trains pulled out from the Federal station, a well-dressed and very respectable looking individual, slightely the worse of a little "tam," entered the car, and approaching a lady who was occupying part of a seat, and said:—

"Madam, is th (hic) is seat taken?"

The lady very pleasantly answered, "No sir."

"Madam, may I (hic) sit down?"

"Yes, sir, you may."

The boosy individual took a seat, and in a few moments the train started. He sat seemingly contented and happy for a few minutes. All at once he threw his arms about his fellow traveller, and kissed her vehemently several times.

Several passengers in the crowded car at this relaxed their features. The fellow kept up his loving method of procedure and the lady appeared to be resitting him as best she could. Finally a number of the most determined of the passengers made a simultaneous bounce for the bossy man. One individual raised a window and it looked as if the fellow was going to hunt terra firma, when he suddenly seemed to take in the situation.

"What doos yi (hic) yon fellows want?"

The only answer was a more determined effort to lift the speaker from his place. Then the other occupant of the seat turned and took part in the conversation—

"Gentlemen," she said, "this is my husband."

"Oh—"

The man and his wife had entered the car before any of the other passengers, and he had gone out for refreshments. When he returned, feeling very humorous, he addressed his partener in such a tone that everybody could hear him, as though she was a stranger, and that's what fooled them.

NATURE MAKES NO MISTAKES.

Nature's own remedy for bowel complaints, cholera morbus, cholic, cramps, vomiting, sea sickness, cholera infantum, diarrhœa, dysentery, and all diseases of a like nature belonging to the summer season, is Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, which can be obtained of all dealers in medicine.

THE DEVIL'S CRADLE.

In a church not far north of Aberdeen one of the members was in the habit of sleeping every Sabbath during the sermon. One day, however, the quietness and gravity of the church were upset by the sleeper losing his equilibrium and falling right on his head in the passage. The minister, who was a plain spoken old man, stopped short in his sermon, "John, ye've got money a soun' sleep in the devil's cradle, but he has fairly cupit ou ye the day."

AUGUST

The summer season now reaches its climax, and is prolific in developing bowel complaints. Over-indulgence in fruit, immoderate drinking of iced waters and summer beverages, in a few hours proved fatal ravages among children and adults. Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry is the most reliable remedy for all forms of summer complaints. Safe, pleasant and prompt in its effects. All dealers keep it.

HOW ENGLISH WOMEN SHOOT.

Lady Florence Dixie, who, when last heard of, was in the camp at Bennett's Drift, camping out, and cooking her own rations with the help of Sir Beaumont, has re-established the somewhat damaged reputation of her country men for shooting. There was a Dutch Boer one of the four told off to guard the Boer leaders attending the Royal Commission. This Boer talked very big about his shooting powers and very small about those of the English. Lady Florence challenged him, therefore, to a trial of skill. The match was arranged. The Boer shot with a Martini Henri rifle, Lady Florence with a Winchester, at bottles placed at a distance of 100 yards. To the delight of all the onlookers, Lady Florence hit her bottles one after the other as if they were elephants, and the Boer went away signally defeated and with the conviction that if all Englishmen can't shoot, some Englishwomen can.

HE TOOK HIS PAY IN KISSES.

The following "good one" is told at the expense of a dentist, located not far from Ovid, N. Y. A young lady while under the influence of an anesthetic had four teeth extracted. As she was a very handsome "subject" the dentist, who was an unmarried man, could not resist the temptation, of stealing a kiss for every tooth he extracted. The young lady was not so much under the influence, however as he thought, and decided to be even, with him, and so on arising from the chair she said she had forgotten her purse, but would send the amount, two dollars, the next day by a friend. The following day the friend went to the office and presented the dentist with a bill from his fair customer, in which she gave him credit for extracting four teeth, two dollars, and charged one dollar each for the four kisses, and added; "Please remit the balance, two dollars." He paid the bill.—Ithaca Journal.

ARE YOU GOING TO TRAVEL?

Don't forget a supply of that Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry; It is a superior remedy for sea sickness, and a positive cure for all bowel complaints induced by bad water, change of diet, or of climate. Whether at home or abroad, it should be kept at hand in case of emergency.

LAST WORDS.

However physiologists may question the importance of the feeble utterance of the dying, it is certain that mankind in general find a deep significane in the last words of those who are vanishing into the unknown life.

"He raves!" said the physician, when Dr. Adams, rector of fhe high school at Edinburgh, was passing away; but, as we catch the last words of the raving, our own eyes are dimmed: "It grows dark, boys," stretching forth his hand; "you may go."

"All my possessions for a moment of time!" moaned Queen Elizabeth.

Wesley, calmer, said as he died, "The best of it all is, God is with us."

And deaf Beethoven, whose soul had ever been filled with harmony, exclaimed gladly, at the last, "I shall hear."

"Is your mind at ease?" Goldsmith was asked by his physicians. "No, it is not," was the mornful repily, and he spoke no more.

How different the parting words of Dr. Wm. Hunter: "If I had strength to hold a pen, I would write how easy and pleasant a thing it is to die."

Or the assurance of President Edwards, as his dying grasp loosened on hard forms of dogma; "Trust in God and you need not fear."

Byron said, wearily, "I must sleep now." Goethe, turning to his wife, called for "Light, more light." Dr. Johnson died in a tumult of uneasiness and bread. Cowper sank to rest as peacefully as a child. "I am taking a fearful leap in the dark," cried Hobbes, the deist. "Now, Lord, Lord, received my soul!" whispered Herbert on his last "sweet day."

Politeness was no longer a ruling passion, but a chrism, when Chesterfield in dying, said, "Give Dayrolles a chair." And surely something was forgiven of Charles the Second when he bade farwell to earths pomp and wickedness in "Don't let poor Nellie starve."

Haller's last words were, feeling his own pulse, "The artery ceases to beat." Petrarch died suddenly and silently in his library, his hand upon a book, and Sis Isaac Newton was winding his watch when he was ushered into the life that hath no end.

Talma, the great actor, exclaimed pitifully as he went, "The worst of all is, I cannot see." John Locke murmured, "Oh, the depth of the riches of the goodness and knowledge of God." The dying admonition of the learned Grotious to his race, was, "Be serious." Scarron, the French wit, said faintly to his weeping friends, "Ah! mes enfants, you cannot cry as much for me as I have made you laugh in my time;" and Lord Thurlow, in reckless wonder, exclaimed, "I'm shot if I don't believe I'm dying!"

When poor Robert Burns gasped with his last breath, "Don't let the awkward squad fire over me!" he did not allude to his commentators and critics, yet what a significance the words should have for them! And how little Annie Boleyn thought, when, awaiting the executioner, she clasped her fair throat, that "It is but small, very small," would link her forever to the heart of Christendom.

Yes, we cannot doubt that many of the most eloquent sermons mankind has ever listened to have fallen from dying lips. Cæsar grieved "And thou Brutus!" John Quincy Adams' "This is the last of earth;" Mirabeau's frantic-cry for "Music," after his life of discord; George Washington's "It is well"—do they not grow richer in meaning every day? And is it not still blessed to remember the last moments of Melanchon, the friend of Luther? "Do you want anything?" asked his loved one, eagerly. "Nothing but heaven," he answered, gently, and went smiling on his way.—Hearth and Home.

WILFORD'S LITERARY MICROCOSM.

We have received the first number of Wilford's Literary Microcosm, a monthly journal started in the interests of Science and Religion; launched mainly to oppose the materialistic theories propounded by Darwin, Huxley, Tyndall, &c. This first number shows vigor of thought and expression, that will no doubt command the attention of the quarter of a million of readers to whom it has been addressed. It is just the kind of a paper that is wanted at the present time, as may be judged from a slight consideration of some of its leading articles "The immortality of the soul, can it be proved by science?" "Scientific Follies;" "Doubts;" "The Bible and Immortality;" Scientists and the wave theory of Sound," &c. It is edited by A. Wilford Hall, author of the "Problem of Human Life," a very remarkable book on the Christian side of the materialistic controversy now raging. We would advise all readers of scientific works to procure this paper. It can be clubbed with the STANDARD and obtained at even a less cost than it is sold singly to subscribers.

FLESHERTON.

From our own Correspondent.

Harvest is fully commenced here, but laborers are very scarce at any wages.

A splendid rain West of here on Saturday, Sunday it rained to the East of us, and on Monday at 2 p.m., Flesherton was visited with such a downpour that the water ran in streams through the streets and formed miniature lakes in low places.

The C. M. Sabbath School held their annual Pic-nic to-day, August 2nd and had a fair gathering in the Beaver Meddow. As the day was fine, they had a very enjoyable time. The procession started from the Church with the usual number of flags.

THAT FLESHERTON CORRESPONDENT AGAIN.—For the satisfaction of your numerous readers I would say, that your correspondent is not a bitter enemy to the Reeve or to any of the Council and have nothing to say to them individually, but in the capacity of Councillors only, and I am in earnest on the road question and not "for fun," as the Advance has it, and as the question is being discussed apart from the excitement of Election times, the Advance and not be decieved, for the ratepayers are watching the discussion with the utmost interest and it will have its weight. If I were "Ratepayer," I would let some one else blow the trumpet for the Council.

ROCKLYN.

From a Correspondent.

The crops in this section are looking splendid, in fact never looked better even in the memory of the "oldest inhabitant."

SMART.—One of our Township Collectors hurried up and collected all the taxes in good time, but took the loan of about $140; no interest to pay, you know, but the borrower; but the Council had to go to the bank. Querry.—Did they get the money without interest?

LITTLE CURRENT.

(From a Correspondent.)

OUR Island is believed by those who have never seen it to be a desert. Well, remember there is a fertile spot in every desert. The past two years have been very unfavorable to the farmers of Manitoulin. But judging from present appearances, crops will be good this year. The season so far has been very favorable.

The haying has fairly commenced, and we believe that in our locality double the quantity has been grown.

Near Pike Lake great quantities of coal oil is believed to exist, and steps are being taken to test the region by boring. One thing is certain, the earth below the surface is well soaked with crude oil. Experts say that it is of a better quality than Pennsylvania oil. The proprietor dug down ten feet and about a gallon of crude oil gathered on the water at the bottom. The owner will send specimens to any one who wishes to have a sample.

There is lots of paint in Green Bay which mixes with oil, and it is said to be brown umber. This may some day prove a source of wealth.

On Friday last our village was visited by the Marquis of Lorne. He was very plainly dressed. He expressed himself as being highly pleased with the Georgian Bay scenery. He rejoiced in the fact that Manitoulin was progressing very favorably. He was elated at the loyal manner in which he was received, and the love held by the people for Queen and Country. He visited Chief Negobo in his camp accompanied by the Rev. R. Hill, and took leave about 12 at night. As a speaker he would not take the laurel; however, he left a very favorable impression with our people, and the the Indians are well pleased with the presents of pork and flour. The hearty wish of our people is "God Save the Queen, and Bless the Campbells." Some of our people were so glad of his visit that they did not cease shouting for joy until the "sma' 'ours" had broken in.

ALONG THE WAY TO McINTYRE.

Harvest is on, and the sound of the reaper may be heard cutting the golden grain. The prospects for a bountiful harvest are excellent. If nothing happens between now and the end of harvest to damage the crops the yield will doubtless be much above an average. There are many signs of prosperity. A number of new buildings have been erected and some now in course of construction, a few of which we notice below, along the 6th line of Osprey. Mr. Thos. Gamey, a brick house. Mr. John Radly, Jr., a barn; Mr. John Radly, Sr., a barn; Mr. W. L. B. Hamlin, a grainhouse; Mr. Richard Maxwell, a dwelling house; Mr. D. K. Preston, a barn. The appearance of the country on the 4th line, at McIntyre's Corners, is far above our expectations—the crops in that section looking even better than they do on this side. There are at the above place a hotel, which is indeed a credit to the place, being large, with good and extensive outbuildings, and kept in a respectable manner by Mr. McLean. A general store by D. C. McFarlane, whom we understand does a very large business, and a brick church, (Presbyterian), which reflects great credit on Rev. Mr. Chisholm, B. A., the minister, and his congregation. We spent a very pleasant evening on Wednesday last in the above church on the occasion of the Ordination and Induction of the above minister, of which we will give full particulars next week.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

DEAR SIR,—Some weeks ago I promised to send you a few thoughts on our Congregational Worship.

In all ages worship has been a leading feature in our Constitution, both privately and publicly. It would seem that man must have something to worship—some object that he can adore. From the earliest time this has been the case. The children in our Sabbath schools can tell how that nearly four thousand years ago, Laban pursued after Jacob, his son in-law, because Rachael had stolen his household gods, and how the children of Israel, their wives, their sons, and their daughters took the rings out of their ears and gave them to Aaron to make a calf, that they might worship it. Indeed the command, the very first in order, given by God through Moses to his own Israel, "Thou shalt have no other Gods before me," shows clearly that the people were worshippers, and that worship then was much as it is now, viz: "Idol Worship."

I believe there never was a people who did not worship something or another, and frequently the object of worship is only an imaginary one. Even the Athenians, who were noted for their learning had an altar inscribed "To the Unknown God," and almost universally, people are very zealous in their Idol worship. Sacred and profane history alike attest this fact.

But it is with our worship as Christians at the present day that we are most interested, and when we think of the light, indifferent manner in which this is often gone about in public, we are almost led to cry out "Ichabod!" thy glory is departed.

I do not know how it is, but it seems to me that we are year by year growing more indifferent to the worship of "the Living and True God." The audacious conduct of some, when public worship is going on, is very remarkable. "God is a Spirit, and they that would worship him, must worship him in spirit and in truth." When a congregation rises up to praise God by singing an Hymn or a Psalm, or when they kneel down or stand up to pray to the Searcher of hearts, is it always done with that solemn humility and Godly fear which ought to characterize us in all our approaches to a throne of Grace, either in praising the infinite Goodness, Love, and Mercy, that has been our constant attendants, or in supplicating a continuance of the blessings we are daily and hourly receive, both of a spiritual and temporal nature? I fear not; if it was so our "material" surroundings would not occupy so much of our attention, we would not stare so much at others, nor listen so much to others singing or to the tones of a musical instrument, "the work of man's hands," nor be so much taken up adjusting the folds of baby's dress, or looking round to see if others are paying as much attention to our "Pet," (our Idol if you like) as we ourselves are doing. Many, as they rise to praise, seem to look upon it as a pastime; they listen to the voices of others, or the tones of an organ, and seem determined to take as much sensuous pleasure out of it as they can; they seem to have very little of the feeling of David, the sweet singer of Israel, when he said: "I will sing to the Lord as long as I live." "I will sing praise to my God while I have my being." "I will sing of the mercies of the Lord for ever; with my mouth will I make known Thy faithfulness to all generations."

Perhaps many do not know that the singing in our churches is intended for Praise to our Maker. Many of our ministers neglect the good old way of prefacing the reading of the Hymn or Psalm with the injunction, "Let us worship God by singing to His praise &c." Too commonly the page or number of the Hymn or Psalm is given and read out without any such preface. I think the use of this preface has a good effect, it is a reminder. We need line upon line, and precept upon precept.

Sometimes the music may be at fault. The choir or leader may sing a tune that is not known to the congregation generally, and sometimes the "time" may be wrong. Very much depends upon the selection of appropriate tunes and singing in suitable time. We are to "sing with the heart," that is, we must express with our lips what we feel in our hearts, and that we may the better do so such tunes ought to be sung that will best help our lips to give expression to the sentiments of our hearts. "Time" should be suited to this end; no choir ought to sing a tune unknown to the worshippers, the whole congregation ought to be the choir, every one ought to sing, and sing his or her best, "making melody unto the Lord." I think it would be well if our musical leaders would select more "minor" tunes than they do. We seldom hear a tune in the "minor key," the tunes in use in all our churches, so far as I can judge, are nearly all "majors." I dare say these are the most popular, and are easier to sing, but they don't stir the soul as "minors" do. It is admitted on all hands that our best tunes are in the "minor key." When a "major" tune is being sung, we naturally feel inclined to beat time with our hands or with our feet; when a "minor" is sung it awakens the emotions of the soul, and our hearts, not our feet, beat in unison. Some may object to "minor" tunes as being too grave and solemn, but the real worshipper will not do so. He likes them because with their assistance he can much better express the feelings of his heart.

There has been a great deal of wrangling as to the most suitable position for the body, when we are engaged in worship. Some people insist on kneeling at prayer, as being the best mode; others prefer standing, and others sitting. In my opinion, it is of very little importance which mode is adopted, if the heart be right. I believe, in the Apostolic Churches, the simplest and most suitable mode would be adopted in this, as well as every thing else. For instance, when our Saviour instituted the supper, it was partaken of in the same way as an ordinary meal. St. Matthew tells us "now when the evening was come, He sat down with the Twelve, and as they were eating, he took bread and blessed it, and brake it and gave it to his disciples saying, &c." For several centuries after the Apostles had gone to their reward, it was accounted unlawful to kneel on the Lord's day, this posture being reserved for days of fasting and humiliation. This is asserted by Tertullian, and the Council of Nice passed a solemn decree to the same amount, because on that day is celebrated the joyful rememberance of our Lord's resurrection. The posture both of Public Prayer on the Lord's day, and of receiving the communion, was invariably standing. In fact kneeling at the the Lord's table was not introduced until Transubstantiation arose, and with Transubstantiation, it ought by Protestants, to have been laid aside. When men began to believe that the sacramental elements were really transmuted into the body and blood of the Redeemer, there was some color of apology, for kneeling and adoring them, but when this error was abandoned, that which had grown out of it ought to have been abandoned also.

After our Saviour instituted the Supper he preached a sermon, the like of which has never been preached since. It begins with the fourteenth chapter of the Gospel according to St. John. And afterwards they sung an Hymn, and the service was over. Here in my opinion we have all that is needed—all that was intended we should have for our example in this respect. On that ever memorable night He looked up to His Father, He blessed and gave thanks; He prayed; He preached a sermon, and the congregation, our Saviour and His Apostles sung an Hymn, and then left the room. Here we have the three elements: Prayer, Preaching, and Praise. If we do likewise we will follow his example. All these additions to this simple mode are innovations of man's invention.

One of the earliest practical errors which gained ground in the Christian community was the adoption of the principle that the ministers of religion might lawfully add at pleasure to the rites and ceremonies of the church. In consequence of this error, Augustine complained as early as the beginning of the fifth century that for one appointment of God's, ten of man's had crept into the Church, and formed a burden greater in some respects than was the ceremonial economy of the Jews. Our Saviour (Matt. 15-19) repeats the words of Isaiah "But in vain do they worship me teaching for doctrines the commandments of men." We ought to see that our worship is not "in vain." We ought to ask ourselves the question, are we teaching or practising the commandments of men, in our mode of worship, rendering it "vain?" I fear we cannot answer "No." We must say "Yes;" Notably instrumental music; but perhaps more of this at another time.

DEAR SIR,—I see in your issue of the 15th, that your correspondent "Subscriber" has taken some notice of my communication in the STANDARD two weeks previous. "Subscriber" thinks there is an open sore in our church management. I think very few will doubt this, and the important question is, "How is it to be healed?" It is quite true that much money has been raised and many debts paid off by Popular Public entertainments, but is it right to do so? I hardly think that "the end justifies the means" in this case. We must not "do evil that good may come." I would say to "Subscriber" that in my opinion it is wrong to have debt on our churches, our Parsonages, our Manses, and further it is wrong to promise to pay our minister more than we are rightly able to pay.

If debt places an individual in a false position, if it hinders his usefulness as a neighbor, as a member of the Church, or of society at large. How much worse is it for a body of Christians to be in debt? The evil it may do is incalculable. Paul, in his letter to the Church at Rome, enjoins the members of that church to "owe no man anything," and it would be well for our Redeemer's cause if Christians, individually or collectively, would act upon this injunction. I should like well to have "Subscriber's" views on either increasing our church income or lessening our Church expenditure, so as to keep out of debt. If this can be done, an important point would be gained.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

SIR,—Ratepayer may write under the alias of General Jackson, Tom Davis, the Architect, or any thing else, but he is the genuine "Robinson Crusoe" after all, and as the Advance has got things mixed up, we might as well after this give the gentleman his own name, as this man would be monarch of all he surveys.

We will direct him to some of his own remarks in his last struggle. He says,—"As if I felt interested in the prosperity of the village." I defy him to find a single line that has a tendency to impede its progress, but quite the reverse. One week later and I would have had the credit of the article the Advance brought out on the want of enterprise in the village, and the article that made such a demand for labor. Had that article come from my pen, Crusoe would have set his big fist down on it as he did on the road repairs; but this man Crusoe is a dangerous person to attack or dictate to, he has so many Fridays whom he has charmed with his spittle. But no one lives in a house of his in the village and no shops belong to him, consequently he has no interest in the prosperity of the place, and cares not whether there are any roads to promote commerce either by rail or gravel. It is generally under-tood that he is a land shark; that means low rate of taxation and bad roads.

Because Alderman Dickey did not say to him, "Robinson, this is a splendid island you rule," he kicked overboard Artemesia's best interests a year ago, consequently no broad gauge yet.

Another thing he says,—the grapes are very sour. Now, Mr. Editor, he is barking up the wrong tree. I find it is the correspondent he is after, instead of seeking how the roads may be repaired.

If anyone should know me let that person keep quiet, until I show these beauties up to a demonstration.

The Advance seems a bit curious also. It would suit both these gentlemen better to turn their attention to the station road. It would be a shame to see a road as soft in December as the road is now. If there are no repairs made this summer, it will be impassible this fall.

Crusoe's definition for the Council is incapable. We will let that stand. As to their acts, they do not act enough. I see that no action was taken in Mr. Nixon's case for injuries to his horse in some broken bridge. I am no prophet, but I foretold that law suit. He will say next that the County Council is to blame, of which he is the head. He denies that he had to bear the shame of listening to the Webster-Elliott motion for a mandamus to be issued, but states it was only to see if there was just cause; but he will falsify anything.

The Priceville bride is another case in point. I wonder if Crusoe's lame goat has a nest in it. He says the conclusions are at present, that the County cannot compel the Township to take back the numerous deviations from original road allowances without their consent, and the Township will do no repairs on the deviations because they will not accept the gift. The pathmasters will not do any work on the gravel road at all, because the Township has to see "if there is a just cause for a mandamus to be issued," and the gravel road is left to the charity of some man with a load to put stones in the old culverts to enable him to cross. "Legal advice to be consulted." What next! He says he knows no better thing to do than that the Reeve and Deputy Reeve seek a small grant for our gravel roads. If they will give us the money to repair the station road, which they built the town hall with, it will do in the mean time until we can choose men from amongst us who will do their duty. He says the Reeve has a settled rule of action, viz:—To promise none of the people's money out of the Council." The Reeve always fiddles on that string. "Call a meeting of the Ratepayers!" Doubtless many of the Ratepayers will remember the large sum of money that was distributed among the several municipalities. A by law was introduced into the Council appropriating a portion of that grant for the purpose of erecting a town hall, subject to a decision of a meeting of the ratepayers. Strange to say everyone took an interest in the matter, and had their say as to where and how the money should be spent. It will be remembered that 99 out of every hundred went dead against the by-law, yet, notwithstanding all this, the Council, laughing in their sleeves, passed their illegal by-law, and built the town hall against the wishes of the people, (worse and more of it), and in last year's audit I see they take credit for building it out of the Township funds. If that $800 is not put on the Station road, where the people wanted it—$500 between Flesherton and the station, and $300 between the station and Priceville—the next thing you will hear of, I will call an indignation meeting and give those honorable men a hoist. The Priceville councillor lost his election the next year through it and has never been in favor since.

The amending of the accumulated interest by-law which I promised to tell you about, Crusoe puts the blame on the Council's Solicitor. Notwithstanding that he was the Chairman of the Finance Committee, and the whole combined wisdom of the County Council, after hearing the by-law read, he saw nothing wrong. Adjourned; came home; all O. K; went to bed; the Council Minutes went to the printing office, and low and behold a grave blunder is discovered by a boy in the office. Before they were warm in bed, they were wired to return next day to rectify the previous day's blunder, at a cost to the County of $200 more or less.

I see, Mr. Editor, that one of your able correspondents gives the cost of the Warden's Adress at $133!—"Ye gods and little fishes" did any ever hear the like in nothingness for so much money. No wonder some of the Councillors thought it could be very readily dispensed with. I may here state that I have more than the Reeve in tow—the Council.

It is hinted that if I go on the Reeve will swoop down on me; I wonder if he will bring Friday along to assist him. He, Crusoe, says he has a very excellent Friday this year. We hope he will do great execution when he goes down to co-operate with Proton on the Town Line. Mark how the Town Lines are looked after.

He says the Township had gradually sunk in debt to the tune of $2,500 when a majority of the present Council were elected; but he omits saying that that year's taxes were not collected until the end of the following January, consequently the Council was not in arrears, and the present Council can claim no credit for the present standing of the Township.

He says, "having abandoned every argument of my last, &c." Now, sir, I do no propose to follow him from Township to County Council; from that to sideroad; from that to Keppel, and back to what he calls "his mare's nest" in the Tyrone Bridge. When he is cornered in one place he flies to another.

YOUR CORRESPONDENT.

DARING ATTEMPT AT BURGLARY.

COUNTY TREASURER'S OFFICE ENTERED.—THE PREMISES SURROUNDED AND THE BURGLAR CALLED ON TO SURRENDER, BUT HE MAKES A BOLD DASH FOR LIBERTY AND ESCAPED!

As our readers are aware, our town has recently been the scene of several burglaries, while unsuccessful attempts, in which the burglars have been scared off before effecting enterance, have been of frequent occurrence. As might be expected, the feeling that we have burglars amongst us has made our citizens take extra precautions; and though it not been generally known, some of our merchants have assumed the role of amateur watchmen, in additional to the regular force. Of course in a case of this kind it would defeat their object to have them known, and we withhold names. Notwithstanding these precautions, however, reports of attempts in different parts of the town still continued to alarm our citizens, and it was not till Saturday night, or rather Sunday morning, that the burglar was at last detected in his work and brought to bay. About half-past one on that morning one of the amateur force (a merchant in the grocery line,) was passing up Poulett Street, when his quick ear detected a sound in the establishment of Parker & Co., in the rear part in which the County Treasurer's office is situated, and listening at the keyhole he could distinctly hear a regular sound as of sawing through a door. It would have been madness to attempt to capture the burglar alone, and equally injudicious to make a noise which would alarm and allow him to escape, so he noiselessly posted off to obtain assistance. Fortunately he had only to go to the next corner when he found a constable, and they were soon joined by a number of other citizens, the whole catuiously approached by the middle of the road to avoid noise. It was evident the burglar was taking his work leisurely, for listening at the door they could still detect the sound of sawing; and as there was time, the force, which had now swelled to fifteen or twenty, was dispersed around the building so as to cut off every avenue of escape. Having made sure work for a capture, the member of the firm who sleeps over the shop was awakened, apprised of what was going on below, and got to throw the key down through the window. It was rightly suspected that the burglar, now hearing what was going on, would get behind the door and make a dash the moment it was opened, so preperations were made to recieve him and and the door flung open, when out bound a big black dog! The animal had been locked up through mistake, and its panting in the close, warm atmosphere being mistaken for the sound of sawing. The tableau at the supreme moment when the supposed burglar was about to make his dash for liberty ought to be immortalized in the pages of Grip. The valient constable, revolver in hand, was ready to pierce the desderado with a bullet if he offered resistance—on either side of the door where a well known watchmaker a caragious grocer and several others undistinguished in the darkness, but the simultaneous click of their pistols distinctly audible as the door swung on its hinges—while a valiant down town druggist had taken up his station in the middle of the road with a shot gun, determined to make sure of the villan if he escaped the crowd at the door; and beside him a hard-ware clerk, for want of a better weapon, was keeping up a fusilade with stones bound to hit somebody before he hesisted. A doctor, with a present ment that somebody was going to be hurt, hovered on the outskirts, to be ready with his service. It is needless to say the canine escaped, but it isn't safe to mention burglar in the presence of any of the valiant crowd who assisted at the attempt continue that morning.

A Union School picnic of Sections Nos. 7 and 12 Proton took place on Tuesday, the 5th inst., and was one of the most successful that was ever held in that district. The pupils, numbering about ninety formed into a procession and marched to the picnic grounds with their colors flying, singing as they went. The grounds were tastefully decorated for the occasion. On their arrival Mr. Campbell was installed as chairman and did justice to the excellent programme which had been prepared. The Egremont choir which was present, did much to enliven the time between recitations, dialogues, etc. An address given by Duncan McMillan, Esq., was well received. After the programme had been disposed of the young ladies prepared tea to which ample justice was done, and the display of good things provided reflects great credit on the ladies of Proton. Swingings, croquet, races etc., afforded much amusement to the large crowd assembled which numbered upwards of three hundred. Several teachers were present amongst whom we noticed Miss Wright of Priceville and Messrs. McDonald, Sharp, Young and McLean of the neighboring sections. At the close of the proceedings a vote of thanks was tendered to Mr. Campbell for the very able manner in which we had filled the chair, and also a vote of thanks to the choir and to the teachers, Miss Coleridge and Miss Cross. After singing the National Anthem the crowd dispersed to their several homes having enjoyed the best picnic of the season.—Advertiser.

It is to be opened on Sunday next. Services will be held that day, and a confirmation service will be held in the evening. The fine reed organ which was in the old church has been removed to the new one, where it finds a fitting place, and will sound to advantage in its new position.—The old bell is to be used in the mean time, until such time as the congregation is able to purchase a set of chimes. We congratulate the members of the congregation on having so fine a building to worship in.—O. S. Tribune.

ENCOUNTERED A BEAR.—While returning from Tara on Saturday night, Mr. Donald Sinclair had a very exciting experience with his team and a bear. His bearship was sitting beside the road through Sullivan swamp, and as soon as the horses noticed the brute they became very much alarmed, and commenced to rear and plunge in a terrific manner. Mr. Sinclair, however, managed to maintain control over them, and succeeded in getting past the bear, which never stirred from its position. Mrs. Sinclair and a child were in the rig, and were very much frightened. In the language of our informant, "bears are as thick in the Sullivan swamp as hair on a dog."—Tara Leader.

SERIOUS RUNAWAY ACCIDENT.—On Saturday last as Mr. Thos. McComb of Glenelg was driving a load of shingles down the hill just East of this Town, known as Watson's Hill, the shingles moved, causing Mr. McComb to fall off between the horses, one of them kicking him and fracturing his leg, and a bunch of shingles falling off the load on the horses back caused them to run away, scattering the shingles along the road, and leaving the unfortunate driver helpless on the road. The horses were stopped after going over half a mile, and Mr. McComb taken to his mother's near by, and on Sunday evening he was taken home. His injuries are of a serious character, but it is hoped he will soon recover.—Review.

The Flesherton paper has an article in its last issue accusing a certain 'Printer' of dishonesty because he offered to print the ballot papers for the Township of Euphrasia at what he, the Advance man, considered too low a price. We would ask, which was the most dishonest, the man who was willing to do printing at fair remunerative rates, or the man who charged a certain township $18, for what could have been got for $10, or $12 at the most in any other office in the County, and has his little account reduced $6, for his trouble.

More Fraud.—In our issue of the 7th ult., we published an account of a bold attempt at fraud by a Lightening Rod Agent in the Township of Holland We now learn that a more successful attempt has been made by perhaps the same gent on an easier dupe in said township on the Toronto and Sydenham road, to the tune of some $180. We have been favored with the card left by the said Gentleman with the intended dupe No. 1., Mr. Joseph O'Hara, Massie, P. O. The probability is that the same person is the confidence man in each case. The Globe Lightning Rod Co. London, being the parties who have that agent on the road, should see to that no more of such proceedings are carried on in their name. The probability is that this person can now be hunted up, as Mr. O'Hara informed us he can identify him. When will the Country people learn to show such oily tongued gentry the door promply—O. S. Tribune.

In the hot months of July and August the blood should be kept pure and cool, with an occasional dose of Dr. Carson's Stomach and Consitpation Bitters a worthy family medicine. In large 8 once bottles, 50 cents, at Turners & Co.

A Bear Scare.—One of our local bear hunters had a rather vexatious experience on Tuesday evening. A berry party was organized and proceeded to Barford's grove on the afternoon of that day. Everything went on satisfactorily; the berries were splendid—ripe and pleantiful. The party stayed till near dark; and then their departure was very precipitate. One of the party discovered a large black (as she thought) bear coming towards them. The alarm was immediately given, and a general stampede for home was the order. Their tale was soon told, and Mr. Gark got down his rifle and started in quest of bruin, accompanied by several juveniles. On reaching the spot indicated, the sportsmen was rejoiced to see the bushes moving and hearing his bearship. He waited around in hopes of getting a good shot. Presently a small pig came grunting along between him and his prey. He felt sure of the bear now, as he thought it would certainly come out to attack the porker. His expectations were realized. In a very few moments he heard the brute tearing through the brush toward the pig. He braced himself against a stump and got his rifle into position. The pig displayed no alarm, and stood still until its—mother, a large black sow, the property of Mr. Berford, came up to it.—Leader.

THE TEN Insurance Commandments.

1. Thou shalt insure thy real and personal estate and all that thou hast against fire, for—

Defending thyself from misfortune until old age;
Thy happiness shall equal thy wisdom.

2. Thou shalt not insure more than thou dost possess, for insurance is a business wherein thou canst not make money. This is simply thy duty in order to preserve what thou hast acquired.

Preserve that which thou shalt acquire,
Whoso is prudent guardeth his goods.

3. Thou shalt not insure less than thou dost possess—for what thou dost not insure, will not be paid in case of loss.

Though poverty is not a vice
To lose all is not a pleasure.

4. Thou shalt not make excessive declarations of value respecting thy property in case of fire; but thou shall state truly that which belongs to thee, that thou mayest not have a lawsuit or gain a bad reputation

As we make our bed so must we lie.

5. Thou shalt also exhort thy neighbors, thy friends, and thy relations to insure themselves, that they may escape loss, and that poverty through a loss by fire be not laid to thy charge.

That which comes by the flute goes by the drum.

6. Thou shalt not backslide, nor hinder thy neighbor from making all these insurances, for those who are so improvident as not to insure are those who are most visited with losses; no one pities their condition.

Those that are beaten pay the fine.

7. Thou shalt not search for evasion to get rid of the expense of insurance; for it is low in proportion to thy position; thou canst put by as much as the value of the bottles of wine thou drinkest, and thou wilt then have sufficient for all thy insurance.

The pitcher that goes often to the well must in the end be filled.

8. Thou shalt regard the expense of insurance like the expense of thy meat and drink; and as thou canst not do without these, because thou hast hunger and thirst thou shalt not more hesitate about insurance, because it will give thee security, repose, consolation, and aid.

In thirst and misfortune
A pear in reserve is a pleasure.

9. Thou shall be careful when thou insurest that thou selectest a reliable and safe company and that the agent is an honest one, because in so doing in case of a loss thy money shall not have been paid for nought, and if thou lose thy property and not get thy insurance thou will be poorer than a church rat.

If thou fallest into poverty
People will care but little for thee.

10. Thou shalt do all thy insurance with Robert Davis, the Conveyancer and Land and Insurance Agent at Flesherton, for—

He represents only the best companies, and
He guards well his patrons' interests.

ROBT. DAVIS,

Conveyancer, Commissioner in B. R., Real Estate, Loan, and Estate Agent, Flesherton. Branch office, Rutledge's Hotel, Markdale, every Thursday.

CAUGHT AT LAST.

A CANADIAN MURDERER ARRESTED AT EAST SAGINAW.

Evening News' Special of Saturday.

East Saginaw, July 23.—On the 27th of June, 1870, a logging-bee was held in Mulmur township, Simcoe Co. Ont. On the evening of that day some young men engaged in jumping, and a quarrel ensued. A quiet, inoffensive man, named Jno. Bangman, endeavored to quiet the trouble between two of the young men, when he was struck on the head with a sled roller, in the hands of Henery McCormick, fractured his skull, from which death resulted on the following day. McCormick fled the country, and not a word was heard of him until three weeks ago, when J. Murphy, a Government detective at Toronto, learned that McCormick was in the vicinity of East Saginaw. He came here on Tuesday, and yesterday, accompanied by Officer Summerfield of this city, proceeded to Coleman, which is some 40 miles east of here, on the Flint and Pere Marquette road, and found McCormick, on a farm about two miles from Coleman. They arrested him, and brought him to this city; and he is now in the county gaol awaiting the necessary extradition papers to be obtained. McCormick has lived for 8 years in this vicinity, and has a family of eight children.

A NEW SWINDLE.

The ingenuity of swindling is inexhaustible. It would seem as though their devices were almost as numerous as the people. No sooner is one scheme exposed than another, quite as well calculated to deceive, is put in operation. A new scheme is now being worked among the farmers in this neighborhood. The impostor is a young man of about 20, and he has been swindling the unwary under the pretense of plating silver ware with a liquid preparation which he carries with him. Many people who are generally regarded as well posted, have been mulcted in considerable sums of money by the swindler. His plan of work is to stop at a house and offer to do plating at a very reasonable figure. Should the head of the house exhibit any hesitancy his suspicions are allayed by the stranger platting one spoon, which has the appearance of being all right. In most all cases his work takes and he is allowed to do considerable plating for which he receives his pay. But before he departs admonishes the family to permit no one to touch the ware plated until some hours have elapsed and it has time to harden. By this means he manages to get a good distance from the scene of his triumphs. When the time comes for examining the plating on the spoons or silverware, we are informed that it not only comes off on the first using but the metal in the spoons or other ware is made brittle by the plating operation, and generally ruined.—Exchange.

LOGICAL SEQUENCES.

There is nothing like having a logical mind. When an eccentric old gentleman hired a new servant his first question was, 'My man, do you understand sequences? 'I don't know, sir, but if you will explain I will do my best replied the serving man. 'What I mean, is this,' continued the the aged philosopher, when I want you to lay the cloth you ought to know enough to put on the table knives and forks and everything else that is necessary. That is sequence.' All went well for a while, and the logical faculty of the servant became wonderfully developed. He could reach a conculsion from a mere hint, and as for an inference, he could draw one from a look or sign or a gesture. One day the old gentleman fell sick and sent his man for a nurse. He was gone a long time, but at length returned with half a dozen men at his heels. 'What does it all mean?' cried the enraged sick man. 'Why,' replied the newly fledged logician, 'when you sent me for a nurse I knew the sequence of an apothecary; the sequence of an apothecary is a physician; and I haven't kept my eyes open for more than forty years without knowing that the sequence of a doctor is an undertaker; and so, Your Honor, they are all of them below stairs, waiting for your orders.

WONDERFUL TESTS

HOW PEOPLE CAN BREATHE AND LIVE IN NOXIOUS GASES.

Mr. Fleuss has recently given at Portsmouth, before officers of the admiralty, an exhibition of his new diving dress and apperatus for enabling persons to live and work in noxious gases. A diving dress and helmet are only used by Mr. Fleuss for the sake of warmth and personal comfort when below the water, neither being in any way necessary to breathe. He carries below with him the raw material of life in the shape of concentrated oxygen, contained in a small reservoir or tank which he slings over his shoulder like a napsack. At every respiration he draws from his stock by means of a tube and mouthpiece; the exhaled gas, after being strained through a sponge saturated with caustic soda, returns to replenish the tank, the impure ingredients alone being permitted to escape. In this way the diver can remain under water three or four hours and can penetrate into situations which are impossible to the ordinary diver, who is compelled to drag a lengthing pipe at every step, and is always liable to the danger of getting entangled with the means which supply him with air. Mr. Fleuss descended into the stream basin, which he traversed from end to end without experiencing any difficulty, either as regards locomotion or breathing. On the following day he demonstrated his ability to work in smoke and poisonous gases. The test on this occasion was a remarkably servere one. A fire was kindled in the wastehouse with all kind of dockyard refuse, the smoke given off being one of the densest and most pungent description. Mr. Fleuss carried the same magazine with him as before, but divested himself of his diving dress, his only procection being a pair of goggles which covered his eyes and fitted tight upon his nostrils. Thus armed and provided he entered the smoke, in which he was willing to remain an hour or more, but at the end of half an hour he was desired to come out, as it was considered if he could remain in the midst of such fumes for that length of time, a longer time was superfluous. On emerging Mr. Fleuss was apparently as fresh as when he began.

AN OCEAN TRAGEDY

The mate and four seamen of the schooner Eustice, which was blown up in the Gulf of Calafornia on June 14th by the insane cook, arrived in San Francisco a fortnight later, with a vivid story of tragic events which they have survived. On the morning of the 13th the cook displayed symptoms of insanity, but later in the day he seemed to have regained his reason, and, having attended to his work, went to his quarters to bed, as it was supposed. Soon afterward Captain Hornsby went below to light a cigar, and a moment later staggered back to the cabin door, holding his hands over his heart and calling for assistance. It was found that he had been stabbed and in a moment he fell dead. The cook, who was in the cabinet, shouted that he would kill the first person who molested him and then fire the vessel, which contained 2,000 kegs of powder. It would seem as if the mate and crew must have been cowards; but at all events they barricaded the cabin door and made every prepration to abandon the vessel in case it were set on fire. The following day they discovered smoke issuing from the cabin skylight, and forthwith lowered one of the boats which hung from the davit and pulled away. In ten minutes the leeside of the quarter deck was a sheet of flame, and five or ten minutes later there were two ternific explosions in quick succession. The mate and crew got to shore the following day and thence made their way to Mazatian, where they took the steamer to San Francisco.

VIOLA'S REVENGE.

By the Author of "My Lady's Secret," "A Waif's Fortunes," "The Lady of Gordon Lea," &c.

But "my finny friend" had felt or seen the hook, and silently declined the invitation. The angler's thoughts went back to their theme.

Not that I cared at all. Never but once had I the hook in my jaws—up there on the Italian hill-slope, hard by the headless Apollo and the dry fountain and the broken column behind which I lay hidden after stealing her grapes. Viola—Viola!"

He had forgotten all about the fishing. He was wandering along leisurely, and the boy, following with the landing-net began to gape and wonder.

He would have wondered still more could he have seen what his master saw so clearly—not the pleasant green valley and the rippling brook, but the shimmering of soft Italian moonlight, and two statues, one headless, and one with a relentless pointing forefinger bidding him "go."

"Here!" cried Lord Armidale; and the lad, awed by the imperious ring of his master's voice, drew near with trembling hesitancy. "Take my rod carefully to pieces, and carry it and the basket to the house. The sun is getting too hot for the sport."

It was a poor excuse, addressed in point of fact not so much to his attendant as to himself—a poor excuse for one who had so lately borne with indifference the blaze of sunshine on the banks of old Nile. He laughed harshly at the weakness of it as he threw himself upon the ground and dug his elbows into the thick grass of the aftermath.

"Viola!"

He murmured the name once or twice, and he wondered the while whether it would not have been more truly well with him if he had wedded that Italian maiden, whose individuality possessed so strange a fascination.

His aunt, old Lady Rivers, whose wealth had almost cleared the estate of debt, might in that case have disinherited him. Instead of being able to lord it in the halls built by dead and gone Armidales, he might now be rusticating in a little white Italian villa and asking himself sorrowfully how three or four dark-eyed lads and lasses might be reinstated in the position which should be theirs by birth. Yet the picture had an odd charm.

He had been prudent, and he had prospered accordingly; but he knew that something was lacking in his life. Never again might it be sweet and full as in that brief pastoral of long ago. The lips of many fair women might be pressed to his; but never again would their warmth thrill him as the touch of her lips had done. His intelligence might thrust and parry with keen feminine wits; but never would the wit delight him like that curious combination of ignorance and of learnig, of meekness and of pride, of utter loveing abandonment, which changed with such curious facility to utter contemptuous hate.

"Viola, Viola!"

He covered his face with his hands, shutting out the fair English landscape, and, in an instant, he stood again in that sultry southern land, watching one who slept in the shadow of an idle fountain, her head pillowed upon wild flowers and tangled weeds.

Then the restless features lighted up with archness and mirth, the dark eyes flashed with swiftly-aroused anger, melted with sudden contrition, and glowed with the love-light which long lashes tried vainly to conceal. Vivid, as though the years that had passed were but days, was every heart-photograph. There was a strange melancholy pleasure in turning them over and over—pleasure that became each instant more and more like pain, until he grew impatient of of his own weakness and raised his head.

"Viola!"

It was a whisper of astonishment. For a moment he thought he was the subject of an optical illusion. Not a dozen yards away, clad in virgin white, watching him from above a gate which barred further progress, stood the Italian maid herself. Lord Armidale sprang to his feet and advanced towards her, hat in hand; but the rapturous eagerness of the first few steps changed with almost ludicrous rapidity to confusion and uncertainty.

"I—I fear I am trespassing," he said.

It was a lame speech when he was as convinced of her identity as of his own—a lame greeting after five years estrangement; but between recognition and utterance there had been time to remember the cause of the estrangement and to note embarrassing changes in her appearance and demeanour.

"You are tresspassing; but I believe my father is not disposed to resent liberties of that description," she answered.

It was Viola; there could be no matter of doubt. Had he felt any, the sound of her voice would have dissipated it. Full, mellow, sweet, low-pitched, but essentially feminine, he would have recognized it amongst ten thousand.

But, oh, the coldness, the smooth indifference with which she spoke! And, oh, the marble pride which sat enthroned upon her calm features!

"You are—you are——" he stammered.

"Yes, I am Miss Burgot," was the frigid reply; and the beautiful eyes took note unsympathetically of his discomfiture.

Then he understood the depth and breadth of that old offence of his—understood too, that it was her policy to ignore it, and that it behoved him as a gentleman to follow her one. That old assault must be buried in oblivion; to mention were to revive it.

"I had intended to return your father's call to-day, Miss Burgot."

"If you follow the footpath by which I came, it will lead you to the Grange. You will find him at home, and I do not doubt that he will be delighted to see you."

Polite words which would have been cordial but for the complete indifference of the tone.

"May I be allowed to open the gate for you?" asked Lord Armidale.

"Thanks; I do not intend to prolong my ramble."

A sudden hope came to him. If she was about to return and the interview could thus be protracted, might he not possibly, with care and patience, break down this barrier of icy reserve and win forgiveness?" He stood before her, bareheaded and humble, protesting by tone and gesture, as he might not do in words.

"Dare I venture to suggest that, as our routes are identical, we might find our way to the Grange in company, Miss Burgot?

"Our routes are not identical," answered the girl curtly; and with that she turned her back upon him, and went towards the brook, plucking a wild flower or two on her way, as though, having rebuked his presumption, it was too trivial a thing to remember for an instant.

So he went slowly and with many a backward glance along the field-path; but the glances were not returned; and the heart of Claude, Lord Armidale, was heavy within him.

"Better anger than indifference!" He was thinking that he would far rather see her stand--as when he last left her—with pointing finger and eyes aflame, driving him from her presence, than encounter this frigid disdain.

She was not so emotionless as he thought. Now that he was not near to see, Viola Burgot's eyes were shining like stars; her lovely face, unmasked, was working with anticipatory triumph.

"It is coming; at last—at last," she whispered. "After all these years, the hour of my revenge is at hand!"

CHAPTER VII.

Down in the hollow which hid the nearest village, just a mile by the shortest cut through the fields from Burgot Grange, nestled a little weather-beaten church of gray-stone.

Sadly in need of restoration was it; for, although the massive walls presented as bold a front as ever to the procession of centuries, the high-backed pews, the shabby pulpit with the gigantic sounding-board, and even the communion-rails were in the last stage of worm-eaten dilapidation; while the ancient gallery—the front seats of which had within the memory of man been filled with vigorous performers upon "the cornet, flute, harpsachbut, psaltery, and dulcimer, and all kinds of music"—was now deserted by common consent, lest the rustics therein assembled should some day fall through upon other members of the congregation below.

Until the advent of the present Squire, the little weather-beaten church had stood small chance of badly-needed renovation. Its Vicar was a meek retiring man, whose awe of the stern master of Burgot Grange was both ludicrous and pitiable. In secret he cherished a dream of the interior as it should be; but to render that dream a reality a strong subscription-list would be required.

To broach to his only wealthy parishioner a scheme which would demand from him, as a preliminary, a cheque in three figures was beyond the meek Vicar's power. Even from his staunch friend Doctor Preece he hid the thoughts of his heart until the late squire had for some months been gathered to his fathers. Then, and not until then, did the Vicar unburden himself.

"I will discuss the matter with Miss Viola," answered the Doctor gaily.

During those months, Doctor Preece had faithfully fulfilled the parting injunction of his deceased friend—"You might give an eye to niece Viola—the niece I have never seen—for my sake," said Duke Burgot, as he lay dying.

In pursuance of that verbal trust, the Doctor and his charge had become cronies—allies—the firmest of friends.

He had conceived a sincere affection for her; and the quantitity of sincere affection in the girl's existence was lamentably small.

William Burgot was proud of his queenly daughter; he admired her, indulged her, and deferred to her every wish, but hardly with paternal tenderness. Miss Burgot's lovely face, Miss Burgot's majestic figure, Miss Burgot's magnificent voice had been the talk of the shire ever since she burst upon it like a brilliant meteor. But the brilliancy was cold: it did not attract true regard.

Unstinted love, proffered by half the eligible swains in the country, lay at her feet; unstinted hatred was lavished upon her by less beautiful women, evoking only a smile of disregard or disdain; but Doctor Preece was her only friend.

He did not understand her, he fancied that, beneath the pretty scornful indifference and aristocratic repose she had adopted as to the manner born, there seethed a lava-tide of Italian passion.

He thought that there was a life within a life, the inner life being made up of a mystery and a purpose. What the mystery, what the purpose, it was not for him to ask, but simply to win the confidence of his dead friend's niece so effectually that, should she ever need help, she might come to him.

In rough, honest fashion, ignoring the rebuffs with which she met his first advances, he made her understand that in trying to win her esteem and liking he was fulfilling his duty to the dead.

It was smooth sailing for Doctor Preece after that. He was surprised at the eagerness with which she acceded to his representations that the long-cherished desire of the meek Vicar's soul ought to be gratified.

He knew that, although a Protestant in creed, the spiritual fervour was not fed by the cold ritual and austere services of the little gray church in the hollow.

He had heard her speak of the chapel in the monastery, its dim religious light, its kneeling, emotional worshippers, its incense and its flowers, and the rich waves of harmony which spread through it when old Spezzio laid his white fingers upon the organ-keys. He believed that she loved no other house of prayer; and he was surprised and touched to find that for his sake she could entertain such genuine interest in the scheme.

"Here is papa's contribution to head the list," she said, the second time the project was mooted, putting into the Doctor's hand that cheque in three figures for which the Vicar had not dared to beseech the late Squire. "I will solicit all the people I know for subscriptions, and we will make you up any deficiency by holding a bazaar and concert."

So it came to pass that, within one month of the formal introduction of Lord Armidale to Viola Burgot, his lordship's name figured on the list for a subscription which was only second in munificence to that of her father; also that upon a certain day the village in the hollow wore quite a gala aspect, whilst the carriages of half the shire paraded its one long straggling street. The bazaar was in full swing.

On each side of the village schoolroom—a long, low, narrow room, its whitewashed walls hidden by many-coloured flags and by curiously and wonderfully made paper adornments—was a row of stalls, presided over by aristocratic maids and matrons, who played at shopkeeping with infantile delight and cheated their customers with serene composure and roguish glee. Dawdling from stall to stall, laughing, jesting, flirting, haggling, and disbursing with the best of grace in the world the loose silver they had come there to throw away, went a well-dressed throng of ladies and gentlemen who would be quite content if, by way of value received for their money, they passed an enjoyable afternoon.

Doctor Preece was there, of course, acting as an amateur showman, inducting credulous people who were willing to pay a shilling for a peep into a mysterious recess in which about forty works of art with high-sounding titles were supposed to be on exhibition, whilst from behind the green-baize curtain which screened them came bursts of laughter to pique the curiosity of the outer world.

Mrs. Robert was there, and "dear Clara" attired exactly alike, in most becoming costumes, wearing dainty little caps, and looking more like sisters than ever as they presided at opposite stalls.

William Burgot was there, chatting with neighbcring Squires, and made much of by spinsters of all ages. Who does not know how to appreciate a middle aged widower with fifteen thousand a year? In fact everyone was there except Lord Armidale.

Bright eyes were looking for him longingly. "Dear Clara's" hopes were buoyant, for had he not renewed his visits to the Grange with more than the old frequency?

And was it not evident that the attraction was herself, not that frigid Italian adventuress, with her airs of an empress and her monosyllabic disdain, which kept barely within the bounds of civility? And had he not promised "dear Clara" after much entreaty, that he would certainly look in for an hour, if only to suffer himself to be fleeced for a good cause by her pious hands!

The "adventuress" was on the qui vive likewise. Besieged at the head of the room by a crowd of masculine adherents, to whom she unblushingly sold at fabulous prices button-holes of flowers and useles knick-knacks, she answered with repartee and badinage their insipid jests and compliments; but her deep-fringed lustrous eyes wandered over to the door-way, looking for a head crowned with sunny golden hair, a noble head, modelled after the ideal type of ancient Greece, although beauty of feature and graciousness of expression were tempered by an air of careless, but imperious command.

She saw it at length, visible above the dead level of the throng. Lord Armidale was exchanging frequent salutations, pausing here and there, but steadily approaching her.

"Does she love him?" thought Dr. Preece; and the worthy man was perplexed. He saw her lovely face pale and harden, saw her hands tremble for an instant, saw the eager welcoming light in her beautiful eyes, but the light was cold and fierce.

"She is a curious enigma," said the honest man with a sigh.

"Would you accord me the extreme favor of an introduction to the enigma? Any fellow would be charmed to study it," said a voice at his elbow.

The voice belonged to an upright soldierly looking gentleman, to whose personal appearance no exception could reasonably be taken, unless upon the ground that his bushy upturned eye brows and his scanty upturned moustache gave him somewhat the aspect of a middle-aged stage Mephistopheles. So thought Viola Burgot, when, after a moment's reflection, Doctor Preece asked permission to introduce Colonel Petitt.

"I warn you, Miss Burgot," said the Colonel, with an urbane smile which, oddly enough, confirmed a slight prejudice the girl was conscious of feeling towards him, "that 'silver and gold have I none.' Fair banditti have extracted the last coin from pockets that are never too well supplied with cash. I requested the honour of an introduction because your name was once 'familiar in my ears as household words.' Twenty years or more ago, your father and I were bosom-friends."

"Did you know my mother?" asked Viola, forgetting her prejudice in awakened interest. Would he be able to tell her a little about that poor Italian girl-mother whose young life had been sacrificed that a babe might be born into the world?

"I had not that happiness. Your father and I were engaged in the same regiment before he sold his commission. He was in Italy at the time I ... ... will be ... glad to renew his acquaintance with you."

"To tell the truth," laughed Colonel Petitt, "I need to be reassured upon that very point. When a poor man renews his acquaintance with a rich one, the gladness is usually on the side of the former. I confess to disappointment at not seeing him here this afternoon. Twenty years could not so disguise an old friend that I should fail to recognize him instantly."

"Yet he stands within ten paces," said Viola, smiling.

"No!"—and the Colonel's eyebrows were elevated until he looked more like Mephistopheles than ever as he scrutinised all the masculine faces within the given distance. A gesture from Viola brought one of the gentlemen towards her.

"Papa," she said, "let me present you to an old acquaintance; Colonel—Colonel——"

She had forgotten the name; and the Colonel did not supply it. Extreme wonderment was written upon his features, while upon those of William Burgot was a kind of vague and troubled bewilderment.

"You must pardon my haziness of memory," apologized the Squire slowly. "A sunstroke from which I once suffered, whilst serving in India——"

"I do not remember it said the Colonel sharply; "nor do I remember your features; my memory must be affected also. And yet, Burgot, we were like brothers during that year we served together in the old seventeenth."

With the words—as the two men stood gazing at each other's faces—there came into William Burgot's eyes a flash of recognition—of recognition, coupled with something that looked like fear.

"I remember now," he said slowly. We were both young slim fellows in those days; but time has made me fat and round, whilst you are little altered. No wonder you did not know me, Pettitt"

"Not in the least," said the Colonel. The flash of recognition, confirmed by the spoken name, was surely evidence enough that this man was his old comrade! Yet why had he turned so pale? Why did his voice quiver? Why that look of apprehension?

"Nor I you, at first," continued William Burgct. "But, although your identity escaped me, and although my memory has of late failed me strangely—a fact I ascribe, on the principle that any excuse is better than none, to sunstroke in India—I have not quite forgotten the past. Do you remember that night in the trenches at Luckimpore?"

"Remember it!" cried the Colonel; and for a moment his resemblance to Mephistopheles was obliterated. "Why, man, you saved my life!"

"Don't mention it," said William Burgot, with a pallid smile. "Where are you staying?"

"At the one wretched inn this wretched village boasts."

"Then you must chance your quarters to Burgot Grange. I will send a carriage for you at twelve o'clock tomorrow morning. What do you say?"

"That I gratefully accept your offer.'

"It is settled then. Excuse me now; there is a man at the bottom of the room to whom I must say something. We shall have plenty of leisure to-morrow to chat about old times"

"May I pass you? Many thanks," said the courteous, high-bred tones of Lord Armidale. But the Colonel did not hear. He was watching his old comrade's retreating figure.

The crowd was thinner now, and William Burgot's portly frame moved through it with ease; passed at once into the open air, stopping to speak to no man at the bottom of the room.

'Hang me if I understand it!' muttered the Colonel. "If he is William Burgot, what on earth is he afraid of? If he isn't William Burgot, how on earth came he into possession of the family property? How could he recollect me, or that affair at Luckimpore? And now I think I seem to know his features, and they are not unlike those my old chum. Well, there is a secret somewhere and I will improve the shining hours by ferreting it out. Secrets are mines of wealth sometimes to the fortunate holders."

CREAMERIES FOR ONTARIO.

BY PROF. L. B. ARNOLD.

It is but a few years since the prairies of the West were of all places on the continent the most notorions for bad butter. Now the West and Northwest rival the best localities in the East in the excellence of their product. The change which has come over the character of Western butter is due to the introduct of creameries—a result common to their introduction. Wherever the co-operative system of butter making has been adopted similar consequences have followed invariably though not always in so marked a degree. It is not because as good butter cannot be made in families as in creameries that the average product of the latter so much excels that of the former. It is because the latter are conducted by trained experts, who are provided with the best facilities and most approved apparatus for doing the work, while in families butter-making is generally but one of a thousand household duties to share the attention of the housekeeper, usually with but poor facilities and littele or no training.

Butter-making in Ontario now approximates somewhat the former condition of that art in the West. Its general product is heterogenous in quality, and the average character is low. There are localities and individuals here and there that have devoted special attention to butter-making, that turn out goods fine enough to grace a royal table. These examples stand out in bold relief as indications of the capacity of the Province for assuming a high standard in the butter-making world. What is wanting is the introduction of creameries. In these there is now a sad deficiency, there being very few yet introduced. I have seen enough of Ontario to know positively that there is no good reason why it may not reach the highest pinnacle of fame in the production of butter. Grass is nowhere sweeter or more abundant, and nowhere retain its freshness for a greater portion of the season, and water is everywhere plenty and good. Nature has done all that is necessary, if dairymen will only do their part as well.

The co-operative system of cheese-making, coupled with an application of the best skill and intelligence and enterprise, has given to Ontario a proud distinction for the excellence of her cheese. No better cheese is made on the American continent than is now annually turned out of the factories of Ontario. The same distinction might as certainly be reached in the production of butter if the same skill and efficiency were applied to that branch of dairy industry.

To make such an advance, the co-operative system must be applied the same as it is in cheese-making. It can never be attained by the slack and unequal skill which prevails in private dairies. Whenever the creamery system is adopted it will be found that an improvement in quality, and consequently in price, will speedily follow, with no increase in cost in the manufacture. This should be a sufficient inducement to strive for them.

In the States the existence of creameries has improved a great controlling agent in regulating the relative production of butter and cheese. So many factories contain both cheese-making and butter-making apparatus, that they can easily change from cheese-making to butter-making, or the reverse, to such an extent as to prevent a very excessive production in either. Whenever a given quantity of milk will net more turned into butter than it will made into cheese, it is converted into butter; but if cheese nets the most, it goes into cheese. This easy change from one to the other is often the occasion of larger returns to the dairyman than he could otherwise obtain. The aggregate profits of dairying are thus increased, and the annual returns rendered more certain and even. The dairymen of Canada may as well avail themselves of this advantage as their neighbors in the States, and it would be very gratifying to see them do so. Co-operative butter-making is the necessary agent to effect such a result.

AUGUST

The summer season now reaches its climax, and is prolific in developing bowel complaints. Over-indulgence in fruit, immoderate drinking of iced waters and summer beverages, in a few houres prouced fatal ravages among children and adults. Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry is the most reliable remedy for all forms of summer complaints. Safe, pleasant and prompt in its effects. All dealers keep it.

THE DEAD ALIVE.

A MISSING DAUGHTER TURNS UP AFTER TWENTY-EIGHT YEAR'S ABSENCE—STOLEN BY INDIANS.

ST. JOHN, Aug. 4.—Twenty-eight years ago a little girl, Annie Halliday, six years of age, whose parents reside at Chates cove, N. S., was missing, and some three hundred men turned out to look for her, but she was not found, to the great grief of her parents, and after all hope had died out her funeral sermon was preached. A few days ago word was sent to the family that Annie was alive and living with some Indian families within a few miles of her former home. Two of her brothers proceeded to the place and found their longlost sister the wife of a young Indian, and mother of two children. She went with them to the old homestead, which she recoguized, and told how she was stolen by Indians. She refuses to forsake her Indian husband, and her parents are troubled how to act to get her to remain with them.

THE LATE DR. PUNSHON.

HIS LIFE AND WORK RECORDED BY THE WESLEYAN CONFERENCE.

As the names of deceased brethern were taken up by the Wesleyan Conference, in session in Liverpool, the first name mentioned was that of Wm. Morely, Punshon, M. A., L. L. D. The obituary, which had been prepared by the editor, Rev. B. Gregory, was a chaste and able sketch of the character career of the departed. When it had been read, at the suggestion of Mr. Arthur, several stanzas of the hymn commencing were sung, after which Mr. Arthur spoke with great feeling of his friendship with Dr. Punshon, who was in every respect a wonderful man. But he hoped they would not dishonor the Head of the Church by saying "We shall never look up his like again." He also bore testimony to Dr. Punshon's great discretion, While very few had his gift of speech, so few had his gift of silence. Dr. Pope having had to conduct several memorial services on the occasion of Dr. Punshon's death, had been led as a matter of duty to study his character, but what had been at first a duty had become to him a charm. The more he studied it the more he admired and wondered at it. Rev. John Kilner, one of the mission secretaries, said the Mission House had been a sad house since Dr. Punshon's death, and testified to his devotion to the minutest details of his duty. Rev. Wm. J. Morris, a young minister, referred to Dr. Punshon's sympathy with young men, and relatea a very moving instance of his passionate desire for the spiritual results of his ministry.

"Come let us join our friends above"

A SNAKE STORY.

The following snake story, in which the mephitis americana takes an important part, comes from the Township of Glanford, and its veracity is vouched for by one who is cognizant of the facts. Last Saturday on lot 12, con. 2, residence of Geo. Hazlett, was seen a skunk, which becoming frightened, took refuge in the hollow stump of a decayed tree. Mr. Hazelett and Benj. Solee, immediately determined to capture the beast, which was done at short notice, in consequence of the effluvia which prevaded the atmosphere thereabouts. The animal was laid out in state, and as it looked rather large they determined on opening it, which was attended with the astonishing result of finding twenty-seven live snakes. One of these escaped, but the remainder were killed. History does not record the fact whether the skunk and snakes will be stripped and left as an heirloom to coming generations, but their death is as true as true can be.—Mail.

DEATH OF COL. CUMBERLAND.

IT has been known for some time past that the health of Lieut.-Col. Fred. W. Cumberland, Managing Director of the Northern Railway, was in a very precarious state, and therefore our readers will, in a measure, be prepared to hear of his death, which took place at his family residence on Friday last. His death will be sorely felt by the board of Directors of the Northern Railway, for he was the life and soul of it, and it is only through his energy and untiring efforts that the Road is in existence to day, as it was in a pretty critical financial condition at the time he assumed control of it. Mr. Cumberland was in his sixty-second year at the time of his death.

THE PRESIDENT'S HEALTH.

THE health of the President was not as satisfactory on Saturday last as usual, and the physicians in attendance found it necessary to perform another operation, in doing which they ascertained the location of the bullet, and from the knowledge so gained they feel satisfied that neither the liver nor the peritoneum has been touched. Dr. Agnew, the principal physician in attendance, says the wound is not near so serious as was at first thought. He has little or no hopes of being able to extract the ball, but has very strong ones of his ultimate recovery.

Fall grain is an unusally heavy crop in the neighbourhood of Perth, and if well saved will, it is expected, redeem to a great extent last year's failure.

MR DILLON, a leading agitator of the Irish Land League, who was imprisoned some time since for his treasonable utterances, has been realesed, unconditonally, and it is said other prominent offenders will shortly be released also.

AGRICULTURAL laborers appear to be scarce all over the Province. In the Ottawa district the farmers are offering $2 per day and are unable to procure the necessary help to secure their crops, which are said to be unusually good this year, and far above the average.

The regatta in Toronto, on the 7th & 8th of Sept., the first week of the Industrial Exhibition, promises to be the greatest aquatic event ever held in America. Trickett, Ross, Hanlan, and all the big guns will take part. The Railways are going to run cheap Excursion trains on those days so as to enable all who wish, an opportunity to see the celebrated oarsmen of the world.

ANOTHER BEAR STORY.

On Monday of last week, Mr. Wm. Crofford, 12th con., Township of Proton, while passing through a swamp on his road home, saw what he took at first to be a pig, but on approaching he discovered, rather to his dismay, that it was a bear. He passed on, having no weapons with which to attack his bearship. He had proceeded but a short distance when another one came out of the swamp a few yards ahead of him. Here was a dilemma. What was he to do? He was in nearly as bad a fix as the gallant six hundred at Balaklava.

Bear in front of him,
Bear in rear of him,
and for ought he knew,
Bears all around him.

Plucking up courage, he threw a stick at the one in front of him, which brought forth an ominous growl. Then, like Bob Acres, he felt his courage all oozing out at the tops of his fingers, and thinking "discretion the better part of valor," took to his heels; but unfortunately in his haste he did not look where he was going, tripped and rolled over. Poor William, he thought his last hour had come, rapidly there passed through his mind the agony of the dear ones at home who were watching for the one who would never come. However, finding he was not molested, he rose to his feet, look round, and to his great delight found his enemies had all disappeared, and he went on his way rejoicing.

THE USUAL RESULT.

IT is not to be denied that a good sewing machine is one of the most important appurtenances of the modern household.

We thought we had a good machine in our household until one day the agent of the New Home presented himself at our door and proceeded to deliver an oration upon its characteristic merits.

"But," we answered, "our machine serves us nicely and suits us well, and we do not care for another."

The agent, however, was persistent, and finally begged the privilege of leaving one of his machines with us, "for the ladies to try."

The request was not unreasonable, so we granted it—but more to oblige the agent than anything else; for we really did not want the machine, and had not the remotest idea of buying it.

The machine once in the house, it was natural that the ladies should look it over. They did so, and as a consequence fell in love with it. They say that without the slightest wish to decry or disparage any other machine, this, all things considered, is, in their opinion, the most desirable one to be had.

The upshot of the whole matter was that the old machine was disposed of, and the "Light Running New Home" installed in our household—a very fair and satisfactory arrangement being made with the agent.

It is pronounced a genuine beauty and a real comfort, and "our folks" wanted us to tell other folks about it.

This unrivalled machine is manufactured by JOHNSTON, CLARK & CO., 30 Union Square, New York, who wish us to say that all who will send for their new illustrated catalogue and enclose their advertisement (printed on another page), will receive a set of fancy advertising novelties, of value to those collecting cards, &c.

ORDINATION AND INDUCTION AT McINTYRE.

On Wednesday, the 3rd inst., McIntyre presented a very attractive and gay appearance, every one we met was in holiday attire, and all seemed to have their minds set on some particular object: and so it was, for on that afternoon the Presbyterians of McIntyre, Maxwell and Feversham were to be united to Mr. Chisholm, B. A., as their Minister.

The services took place in the church, a nice plain, brick edifice with very comfortable fittings inside. The wise people of McIntyre acted on the good old plan of getting a cage before they got the bird; now they have both, and our desire is to see them prosper

At McIntyre there is a firs-trate hotel with ample accommodation, "out and in," managed by an active and obliging proprietor, and there is a very fine store, where nearly everything, from a needle to an anchor, may be had, owned by an intelligent and obliging gentleman, and now they got a young, active and accomplished minister in Mr. Chisholm, and if the good folks in this locality do not go ahead it will certainly be their own fault.

The proceedings of the day began shortly after 10 o'clock, when the Presbytery of Saugeen met in the church at McIntyre with the Rev. D McLeod, of Priceville, Moderator.—Mr. Chisholm was examined in the various subjects prescribed by the Presbyterian Church before ordination, viz:—a Lecture, a popular Sermon, and an Hebrew critical exercise; also on Biblical Greek and Hebrew, Theology and Church History, all of which were very highly satisfactory, showing that Mr. C. had received a thorough training at Queen's College. Rev. Mr. Eakin, of Dundalk, preached, after which the Moderator asked Mr. Chisholm the usual questions, which were all promptly answered. Mr. Chisholm then seated, and the members of Presbytery laid their hands on him (1 Timoth 4 chap. 14 ver.), while the Moderator offered up a very impressive and fervent prayer; after this was over the members of Presbytery gave their newly ordained brother the right hand of fellowship The Moderator next proceeded to address Mr. Chisholm on his duties as a Christian Pastor, taking as his text Paul's advice to Timothy, "Take heed to thyself." (We will give the address in full next week.) This was an admirable address, many practical points were presented in it, and if Mr. Chisholm "take heed" to them all, he will be a model minister indeed. Rev. Mr. Morrison, of Proton, addressed the congregation on their duties to their pastor, after which Mr. C. shook hands with the members and adherents of the Church, and the Ordination and induction of Rev. John Chisholm to the Pastorate of McIntyre, Maxwell and Feversham Congregation was concluded.

In the evening there was a very nice Tea Meeting in honor of the event. After a plentiful supply of the best of cake and delicious tea, the audience were called to order and Mr. Wm. Brown, Merchant, Markdale, was voted to the chair. After a few opening remarks a long and rich programme was begun. Rev. Mr. Eakin, of Dundalk, was the first speaker, followed by Revs. Mr. Morrison, Proton, Mr. McLeod, Priceville, and Mr. McGregor (Congregationalist), McIntyre, also Mr. Pollock, a fellow student of the newly ordained minister, and Mr. Meldrum, of Flesherton Station. Mr. Anderson sung several of his best songs during the evening accompanied by Miss Anderson, and the Singhambton choir sang two pieces with much taste and precision, accompanied by a young lady belonging to the choir. There was a cake brought forward which was intended to have been an "election cake," but this was not carried out, and on motion of Mrs. Chisholm the cake was presented to Mr. Anderson for his kindness in adding so much to the entertainment. Mr. A. made a suitable reply. A collection was taken up instead of selling the cake. We could observe some who were not all suited on the cake business, not that they were displeased at Mr. Anderson getting it, for he is a general favorite wherever he goes, but they had their minds made up for a brush at an "election" and would not give one cent to the collection, saying that if it had been managed as proposed it would have turned in over twenty dollars. We would not be sorry to hear that McIntyre folks (and others as well) were so much divided on this point that in future there would be no "election cake" in the matter. The meeting throughout was a very pleasant one; all joined in wishing Pastor and people happiness and prosperity, and judging from the manner in which they have wrought so harmoniously in the past the prospects for the future are very bright. After singing "God Save the Queen" all took to their respective homes well pleased with what they had seen, and heard, and tasted.—COM.

Correspondence.

NOTICE.—We wish it distinctly understood, that we do not hold ourselves reponsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

SIR,—Those of your readers who have desire a to witness a truly Apostolic ordination in contradiction to the mono-modial or episcopal form, should not fail to avail themselves of the privilege of being present in Dufferin Hall, Markdale, on Tuesday, the 16th inst., at 2 o'clock p.m. At said time and place the Presbytery of Saugeen of the Presbyterian Church in Canada will meet to set apart according to the simple rites and ceremonies of the early Christian and apostolic church a Pastor of the Markdale and Flesherton congregation. All those who have a desire to understand and appreciate the Scriptural form of ordination as practised by the Apostles and their immediate followers, should attend, as an occasion like the present may not soon present itself in Markdale.

In order that those who witness the interesting ceremony referred to may be profited thereby, the writer would respectfully suggest a careful perusal of the following portions of the sacred scripture, viz:—Acts, 6 & 6, 8 & 17, 13 & 3, also 1 Tim. 4 & 14, and cognate passages.

I am sure Mr. Editor, that in this age of religious life and christian activity, a reference to these matters which appertain to higher duties of life cannot be taken amiss by any of your readers or considered out of place even in a secular journal, I therefore offer the above remarks without further apology.

WM. BROWN.

MARKDALE, Aug. 9, 1881.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

SIR,—It is known to some of your numerous readers that one of the young lady teachers in the Markdale Public School was married during the vacation.

Refering to this matter I understand it has been circulated by some wicked designing person that the trustees refused to allow the young lady in question to give up her position till the end of the year.

I beg sir in the name of the Board to give this report a distinct and unequivocal denial. Mrs. Chellew has never either directly or indirectly, either by herself or any other person, asked the trustees to relieve her of her position. Had she chosen to do so, a repuest very reasonable, would have been at once granted. It is not true, therefore, that the trustees have been so cruel as to prevent the young wife from accompaning her husband to Collingwood or elsewhere.

Why, sir, what are the facts; I have had several applications for the position but have invariably told the parties that as Mrs. Chellew had not asked to be relieved, the presumption was that she intended to teach till the close of the year, to which the trustees would offer no objection.

Why any one should give currency to such a stupid fulsehood I cannot divine, people don't generally act meanly or churlishly without a motive—the motive in this case is entirely wanted, hence the improbability of rumour.

WM. BROWN.

Markdale Aug. 8 1881.

ON Tuesday afternoon a picnic was held in the grove of Mr. Armstrong adjoining the village in honour of the Misses Reid and Miss McIntyre who are about leaving our village, the former for the States, and the latter for Toronto. About thirty sat down to tea, which really did credit to the ladies of Markdale, and we are safe in saying that the gents present did full justice to the good things provided (the Lemon Pie not excepted). After tea a pleasant time was spent in games, singing, recitations, &c., and as the day declined the party repaired to Dufferin Hall, where the evening was spent in social amusements, and at a late hour the party dispersed well satisfied with the day's recreation. We all join in wishing the Misses Reid and Miss McIntyre success in their new homes.

THE Masonic Excursion on Friday, under the auspices of Lorne Lodge, here numbered between 400 and 500. A large contingent came from Markdale, Flesherton, Dundalk and other places. The train being somewhat late in arriving at Toronto, the Empress of India, which was to have taken the excursionists to Lorne Park, had departed without them. The excursionists consequently amused themselves in their own way, which was probably, on the whole, very satisfactory. The party was accompanied by the Shelburne brass and string bands, who considerably enlivened the tediousness of the journey. The affair, on the whole, was a financial success, and as such, very creditable to its originators.—Free Press.

SERIOUS RUNAWAY ACCIDENT.

Since last issue there has been quite a series of runaway accidents in this Town. On Friday last a blind man delivering tea having engaged Mr. Henry Williams to drive him round and while thus engaged the horse took fright and ran away, throwing Mr. Williams out and breaking his shoulder blade. The tea was scatered along the road and other injuries done Mr. Williams was conveyed home, and medical aid procured, and we are glad to hear that he is progressing favorably. Meanwhile a constable from Walkerton arrived with a warrant and arrested the blind man for pedling without a license. He was taken to Walkerton and fined.

On Monday last a team belonging to Messrs. McKechnie ran away in the Station yard, where they had been drawing lumber, and running over logs, stumps and stones dashed through the board fence at the South end, breaking a post off short, and running down the hill towards the river struck a stump and rolling over several times landed at the bottom in a confused heap, the waggon tongue and reach being broken, and one of the horses had it's leg so badly fractured that next day it had to be shot. That will be a serious loss to Mr. McKechnie, as the horse was a good one.

On Tuesday a team belonging to Mr. McCauliff, of Normanby, ran away from McKechnie's Mill up to Garafraxa Street, and in turning a corner fell, and were captured before they could get away again. In this case no serious damages was done.—Grey Review.

ACCIDENT OR SUICIDE?

A MAN DROWNED IN THE DON YESTERDAY MORNING.

Yesterday morning about ten o'clock a commotion was caused at Riverside by the report, brought to the village by a little girl named Gossman, that a man named John Bolton had been drowned in the river. Bolton lived with his brother on De Grassi-street, and was married only recently. The circumstances attending his untimely end are to a large degree enveloped in mystery. The following are versions of the affair, the only witness to the event, other than deceased's brother, being the little girl mentioned above. The two brothers were together at the Kingston-road bridge, when deceased propcsed that they should plunge into the river together; but the suggestion did not meet with a response. Then, again, it is said that deceased was drowned while attempting to rescue a dog which accompanied him. The animal got into the water, and Bolton while in the act of taking off his coat with the intention, it is said, of rescuing his canine friend, overbalanced himself, fell back over the bridge into the water, and was drowned.

It seems no one but the girl Gossman was near the bridge when the man met his death. She ran home and raised the alarm. She at the time was unable to give a coherent account of the affair. The fact that deceased did get into the river was sufficiently proved, it is thought, by the finding of his coat on the bank, and the recovery from the river of his hat. The coat was identified by Mr. Bartlett, Bolton's father-in-law.

At twelve o'clock Esplanade Constable Williams arrived with the necessary apparatus for dragging the river, and after a search of about two hours succeeded in finding the body, which was at once conveyed by County Constable Bedley to the late home of the deceased on Degrassi-street.

A street car driver with whom the two brothers returned from the city in the morning, states that they were both under the influence of liquor, and that they had no dog with them. The surviving brother says that when they got to the bridge deceased took off his coat and jumped from the centre of the bridge on the south side, into the water after a dog that had somehow got into it and was struggling to get out, but when questioned as to particulars, his answers were very confused, and it was evident that he was too drunk to be able to give any reliable account of the affair. Of this much be speaks with certainty, that his brother jumped off the bridge, that he only rose to the surface once, and that he himself ran to the bank to see if he could render him any assistance and then ran home to tell them that Jack was drowned. The girl Gossman, the only other person present at the time, says that she saw both men on the bridge, and that deceased went down the embankment at the city end, between the sidewalk and the Club boat-house. He fell in from that bank, and sank about twelve feet from shore, and about thirty feet on the south side of the bridge. This account is corroboratee by a man who was working at the time at Davies' brewery, and saw what occurred from the top of the building. He says that deceased went to the end of the bridge and took off his coat, and in endeavouring to get over the rail fence he fell over and rolled down the embankment.

The deceased, John Bolton, was an employee of Marchemont Bros., and was said to be fairly steady and industrious. On Monday he went to an excursion at Lorne Park, and did not resume work yesterday morning. The report that he was married only the previous evening is not correct, as he had been married for some months. It is not known whether an inquest will be ordered to enquire into the facts of the case.—Globe.

We do not often make any editoral mention of the proprietary medicians advertised in our column, but we believe it to be a duty we owe to our readers to call their attention to the advertisement of Dr. J. C. Ayer's Ague Cure which appears in this issue of the paper.

We know from experience that nothing is more disheartening than the insidious approaches and periodical attacks of malarial and miasmatic disorders. The remedy prepared by Dr. Ayer & Co. has been in use many years, and has proved a positive antidote for disorders of this nature. It is, withal, a safe and harmless one to take, being composed entirely of vegetable ingredients, without either quinine or minerals, unlike other so called Ague Cures, and consequently incapable of producing the deplorable effects which follow the use of these drugs. Our western people owe a debt of gratitude to Dr. Ayer for the production of this valuable medicine. Its timely use will save much suffering and we recommend it with the greatest confidence in its ability to do all that is claimed for it.—Athens, Ark., News.

TRAVERSTON.

From a Correspondent.

Mr. and Mrs. Glencross and Mrs. William Glencross, met with a very serious accident when returning home from Durham on Saturday evening, 6th inst., a little before dark, at the bridge at the north end of Mr. Jack's place, 8th con. Glenelg. When descending the hill to the east of the bridge, the carriage in which they were seated went suddenly down in front off a ledge of rock, raising the hind wheels with a sudden jerk, threw the occupants out, disabling the ladies so that one of them had to be carried home, the other managed to walk with the assistance of a person on each side of her. Dr. Jamieson, of Durham, arrived about 12 o'clock same night and attended to their wounds and bruises. They are progressing, so far, favorably, though very sick and sore, being badly bruised about the head and body.

The road where the accident occurred is very unsafe for travel, and many have predicted serious misshaps when happening to pass that way.—We hope the attention of the proper officials will be directed to this, and other dangerous places, in order to prevent or guard against occurences of this kind.

We understand that Mr. Philip Meggitt, who was sun-struck lately while working at the foundation of Mr. Hall's barn, at Hall's Mills, Glenelg, is now able to resume work, though somewhat deaf especially on one side. People exposed to the scorching rays of the sun in excessively hot weather should endeavor to keep the head cool, with water, leaves, linings, &c., and thereby help to prevent casualties. Had Mr. Meggitt fallen very far he would undoubtedly have been killed, as it was he was insensible when found, though he fell only about five feet.

PADDY FROM CORK.

THE CENSUS.

A summary of the results of the recent census was published on Monday of last week, and the population of the different Provinces, with their increase since 1871, are found to be as follows:—

Province.	1871.	1881.
Ontario	1,620,851	1,913,460
Quebec	1,191,516	1,358,469
New Brunswick,	286,594	321,129
Nova Scotia	387,800	440.585
P. E. Island	94,021	107,781
Manitoba	12,728	49.509
Brit Columbia	33,586	60,000
Territories and Manitoba exten.	60,500	100,000
	3,686,596	4,350;933
		3,686.596
Total increase		664,337

INCREASE BY PROVINCES.

Provinces.	Increase since 1871.
Ontario	292,609
Quebec	166,958
New Brunswick	35,535
Nova Scotia	52,785
Prince Edward Island	13,760
Manitoba	36,781
British Columbia	26,414
Territories and Manitoba extension	39,500

Taking into account that during the decade the country has passed through a period of depression which had a tendency to lessen immigration and thus retard the growth of population, the aggregate increase of 661,337 to the population of the Dominion is a gratifying one, tending to show that notwithstanding this drawback, the country has made a substantial progress. Ontario, of course, takes the lead in progress, but a remarkable feature of the census is the very large increase made by Quebec, numbering 166,958, while in the decade between 1861 and 1871 that Province only increased 79,950. The Maratime Provinces, though not making such rapid progress as Ontario and Quebec, have yet made rapid progress, the aggregate increase being about the same as between 1861 and 1871. The population of British Columbia as given above, is only an estimate, and in some of the remoter districts of the other Provinces the numbers are estimated too; but the figures will be found very near the mark. The population for Manitoba is that within the old boundaries. The principal cities of the Dominion, the figures for which are given, have also made rapid advance—the only exception to the rule being St. John, N. B., which owing to the great fire and other untoward circumstances shows a decrease from 28,806 to 26,128. The population of the other cities, compared with that of 1871, with their respective increases, are as follows:—

	1871.	1881	Increase.
Montreal	107,225	140,682	33,457
Toronto,	56,092	86,445	30,353
Quebec City	59,699	62,447	2,748
Halifax,	29,582	36,102	6,520
Hamilton,	26,716	35,965	9,249
Ottawa	21,545	27,417	5,872
London,	15,826	19,763	3,937
Kingston,	12,407	14,093	1,686

Our own County, we find, has increased from 56,895 in 1871 to 74,104—the populations and increases of the different ridings being as follows;—

FATAL ACCIDENT.—On Monday last John Krumholtz, a youth of 15, accompanied by a younger brother, was teaming tan bark into Colpoy's village On arriving at Spragge's hill the younger boy got off to lock the waggon wheels. Before this was accomplished the horses started down the hill. The bark slid forward and the unfortunate youth was thrown to the ground, the waggon passing diagonally over his chest. When picked up he was insensible. Dr. Beatty was immediately summoned but life was extinct before his arrival. We cannot have a more opportune time for calling attention to the dangerous grade of the hill in question. A little money judiciously expended might prevent the recurrence of another such a calamity.—Ebbor.

Mr. Rutledge, of this journal, went to Toronto on Tuesday to purchase more type and other material. This has been rendered necessary by the very large increase in our patronage, arising from the prompt and satisfactory manner in which we turn out our work.

First class Job Work done promptly and cheaply at the Standard office.

The Garden Party on Monday evening at the Methodist Parsonage was in every respect a success. The evening being pleasent, the party was largely attended, about 200 being present. The amusements were heartily enjoyed by all, in fact every one seemed brim full of fun. The refreshments were dispersed with a relish. The Ice cream and lemonade were also made scarce, and those bouquets, what a variety, from the modest garden flower to part of a potato patch. Some of the young ladies were a little dear, we mean with their bouquets. The pastor and his amiable lady did all in their power to add to the enjoyment of those present. Proceeds $86.

There are a number of our Subscribers who have not paid their subscription. We need money for carrying out our contemplated improvements, such as a quantity of new job type, building a new office, and making other improvements rendered necessary from the rapid increase of our business. This, as all know, requires considerable funds, and we will feel obliged to those who are in debt to us, if they would call and pay up.

Horse-Shoeing a Specialty.

Markdale, June 2, 1881. 14-tf

Is a compound of the virtues of sarsaparilla, stillingia, mandrake, yellow dock, with the iodide of potash and iron, all powerful blood-making, blood-cleansing, and life-sustaining elements. It is the purest, safest, and most effectual alterative medicine known or available to the public. The sciences of medicine and chemistry have never produced so valuable a remedy, nor one so potent to cure all diseases resulting from impure blood. It cures Scrofula and all scrofulous diseases, Erysipelas, Rose, or St. Anthony's Fire, Pimples and Face-grubs, Pustules, Blotches, Boils, Tumors, Tetter, Humors, Salt Rheum, Scald-head, Ring-worm, Ulcers, Sores, Rheumatism, Mercurial Disease, Neuralgia, Female Weaknesses and Irregularities, Jaundice, Affections of the Liver, Dyspepsia, Emaciation, and General Debility.

By its searching and cleansing qualities it purges out the foul corruptions which contaminate the blood and cause derangement and decay. It stimulates and enlivens the vital functions, promotes energy and strength, restores and preserves health, and infuses new life and vigor throughout the whole system. No sufferer from any disease which arises from impurity of the blood need despair who will give Ayer's Sarsaparilla a fair trial.

It is folly to experiment with the numerous low-priced mixtures, of cheap materials, and without medicinal virtues, offered as blood-purifiers, while disease becomes more firmly seated. Ayer's Sarsaparilla is a medicine of such concentrated curative power, that it is by far the best, cheapest, and most reliable blood-purifier known. Physicians know its composition, and prescribe it. It has been widely used for forty years, and has won the unqualified confidence of millions whom it has benefited.

Markdale, August, 3rd, 1881.

THE TEN Insurance Commandments.

1. Thou shalt insure thy real and personal estate and all that thou hast against fire, for—

Defending thyself from misfortune until old age,
Thy happiness shall equal thy wisdom.

2. Thou shalt not insure more than thou dost possess, for insurance is a business wherein thou canst not make money. This is simply thy duty in order to preserve what thou hast acquired.

Preserve that which thou shalt acquire,
Whoso is prudent guardeth his goods.

3. Thou shalt not insure less than thou dost possess—for what thou dost not insure, will not be paid in case of loss.

Though poverty is not a vice
To lose all is not a pleasure.

4. Thou shalt not make excessive declarations of value respecting thy property in case of fire; but thou shall state truly that which belongs to thee, that thou mayest not have a lawsuit or gain a bad reputation

As we make our bed so must we lie.

5. Thou shalt also exhort thy neighbors, thy friends, and thy relations to insure themselves, that they may escape loss, and that poverty through a loss by fire be not laid to thy charge.

That which comes by the flute goes by the drum.

6. Thou shalt not backslide, nor hinder thy neighbor from making all these insurances, for those who are so improvident as not to insure are those who are most visited with losses; no one pities their condition.

Those that are beaten pay the fine.

7. Thou shalt not search for evasion to get rid of the expense of insurance, for it is low in proportion to thy position; thou canst put by as much as the value of the bottles of wine thou drinkest, and thou wilt then have sufficient for all thy insurance.

The pitcher that goes often to the well must in the end be filled.

8. Thou shalt regard the expense of insurance like the expense of thy meat and drink; and as thou canst not do without these, because thou hast hunger and thisrt thou shalt not more hesitate about insurance, because it will give thee security, repose, consolation, and aid.

In thirst and misfortune
A pear in reserve is a pleasure.

9. Thou shall be careful when thou insurest that thou selectest a reliable and safe company and that the agent is an honest one, because in so doing in case of a loss thy money shall not have been paid for nought, and if thou lose thy property and not get thy insurance thou will be poorer than a church rat.

If thou fallest into poverty
People will care but little for thee.

10. Thou shalt do all thy insurance with Robert Davis, the Conveyancer and Land and Insurance Agent at Flesherton, for—

He represents only the best companies, and
He guards well his patrons' interests.

ROBT. DAVIS,

Conveyancer, Commissioner in B. R., Real Estate, Loan, and Estate Agent, Flesherton Branch office, Rutledge's Hotel, Markdale, every Thursday.

CHRONICLES.

Hear me, oh ye tillers of the soil; open ye your ears and harken into my voice

Put not your trust in men who show unto ye models of strange and wonderful inventions, else ye be bamboozled and decieved.

Look not upon the model of the machine that goeth forth into the field to reap and gather up the sheaves.

Nor upon the pump that requireth not human aid to sednce from its subterranean bed the sparkling waters for the refreshment of lowing kine.

Turn ye away from him who presenteth them; flee from the sound of his velvet embroedered voice.

Else it bit ye like a serpent and sting ye like the prickings of the concience of him who defraudeth the publisher and payeth not his yearly tithes.

From his lips droppeth tafly as droppeth the sap from the sugar trees in the camps of our fathers.

Shun him, oh ye agitators of the clodded field, for he will draw over thine eyes the fleecy substance which is wool; yea, verily, he will hornswoggle ye with words that are pleasant unto the ear.

He will say unto ye: "Sign ye this covenant that ye may act in my stead and supply the toiling masses with my handiwork.

"Serve ye as my agent, for will ye not therefore wax rich; will not the silver and gold flow into thy coffers.

"Sign quickly I beseech ye, that another may not reap the golden harvest in thy stead.

And when ye sign or engrave upon the covenant thy seal, he will go on his way rejoicing, caying unto himself:

"Verily, did I not strike the duffer handsomely; did I not turn the trick in bang-up shape?"

When a fortnight passes the machines have come not; the wonderful mechanism hath failed to meteralize.

A BLACK WALNUT STORY.

... smartest Texan, and. in fact, ... smartest farmer I ever met, is ... Graves, who lives on a 100 ... farm west of Waxahatchie, in central Texas. After Mr. Graves ... shown me his cattle and cotton ... took me over to see his woods.

"Well, what of it?" I asked, as ... pointed out a ten acre forest.

"What of it?" Why them's black walnuts, sir. Ten acres of 'em. Planted 'em myself, ten years ago. See, they are ten inches through. Good trees, eh?"

And sure enough there was ten acres of hand-planted walnut trees. Th... ...ed about 200 feet apart, 200 to the acre—in all 2,000 trees.

"Well, how did you get your money back?" I asked.

"Black walnuts are worth $2,50 a bushel, ain't they? I'll get 400 bushels this year. That's $1,000. A hundred dollars a year is good rent for land worth $15 an acre, ain't it?"

"Well, what else?" I inquired, growing interested.

"The trees," continued Mr. Graves, "are growing an inch a year. When they are 20 years old they will be nineteen incnes through. A black walnut tree nineteen inches through is worth $15. My 2,000 trees ten years from now will be worth $30,000. If I don't want to cut them all I can cut half of them, and then raise a bushle of walnuts to the tree—that is, get $2,500 a year for the crop. Two hundred and fifty dollars an acre is a fair rent for $15 land, ain't it?"—Chicago Tribune.

JULY.

During this month summer complaints commence their ravages. To be forewarned is to be forearmed. Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry is the best known preventative and cure for all forms of bowel complaints and sickness incident to the summer season.

TEN DAYS TOO LATE.

A man who lives in the Saginaw Valley was at the depot to take the train for home. As he was buying his ticket, an old friend who lives here, slapped him on the shoulder and gave him a greeting. After a few salutions, the Detroiter asked:

"Have you married again?"

"No."

"Do you want to?"

"Yes."

"Come with me, I know a widow whom I can recommend."

"Can we get back to the depot in fifty minutes?"

"Yes; easily."

"Very well; lead the way."

That's all there was said about it until they reached the Central Market. The Detroiter walked the Valley man up to the stand of a well known and fair looking widow and said:

"Mrs. Black, my friend has only a few minutes to spare. You are a widow?"

"Yes."

"Three children?"

"Yes."

"Healthy, good natured, and a member of the Baptist church?"

"Yes."

"Very, well; this is Mr. Blauk of Saginaw; he is forty-seven years old, sound as a dollar, owns a good farm, has two children, and is looking for a second wife. Do you like his looks? Will you encourage him? Do you think you could love him? He is in a hurry, and can't fool away time. Yes or no?"

"No," replied the widow, as she arranged her pie plant and radishes; "he's ten days to late; I am engaged to a widower in Toledo."

"That's honest injun?"

"True as I live."

"Nuff sed—good morning, and he has thirty-one minutes left to go to the train."

And the Saginaw widower picked up his grip sack and walked off without a change of countenance.—Detroit Free Press.

No Hospital Needed.—No palatilal hospital needed for Hop Bitters' patients, nor large salaried talented puffers to tell what Hop Bitters will do or cure, as they tell their own story by their certain and absolute cures at home.—New York Independent.

NATURE MAKES NO MISTAKES.

Nature's own remedy for bowel complaints, cholera morbus, cholic, cramps, vomiting, sea sickness, cholera infantum, diarrhœa, dysentery, and all diseases of a like nature belonging to the summer season, is Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry, which can be obtained of all dealers in medicine.

VIOLA'S REVENGE.

By the Author of "My Lady's Secret," "A Wife's Fortune," "The Lady of Gosden Lea," &c.

CHAPTER VIII.

"What have you for sale, Miss Burgot, to the lucky possessor of Fortunatus's purse?"

"Do you possess it, my lord?"

"Not exactly; but I am not so poverty-stricken a wretch as I once was," said Lord Armidale; and through the jesting tones ran a vein of meaning.

"Were you once a wretch, or poverty-stricken?" asked the girl, with an inflection of contempt which stung him to swift anger.

But the anger was impotent. He dared not answer the question, dared not allude to the past which she had elected to ignore. That it was ever in her mind, as in his, he knew full well; and he had educated himself to bear every taunt in silence, that his present humility might perchance atone for the old insult which he dared not ask to forgive, lest the mention of it should be esteemed a repitition.

"I am not poor now, and my purse is at your service. If I were Fortunatus, I would ask you to share it."

He saw her eyes sparkle with triumph. Love lent him subtle intuition; he divined that, in spite of her coldness and disdain, his homage was sweet to her.

Never had he found her in the melting mood, never had she relaxed the vigilance with which she seemed to impress upon him that she held him as almost beneath her scorn; and he hoped—the wish being father to the thought—that, sooner or later, she would be content with the unacknowledged expiation, and forgive.

She might have brought him to her feet, he reasoned, by the merest soupçon of hypocrisy some women practise so readily.

That she delighted to humiliate him he knew; but, if there were not behind the delight in his punishment a half-formed intention eventually to condone the offence for which it was inflicted, why could she not take her revenge and let him go?

One look of interest, of sympathy, of tenderness would bring him to her feet. He believed that she knew it, and kept watch and ward over herself lest that look should be bestowed.

He thought that she would like to have him there, pleading as for dear life, baring his heart to her, suing for pardon and for love; but he hoped that her desire to postpone the eclaircissement arose from an undefined wish first of all to punish him thoroughly for by-gone sin. He did not fathom the depth of Viola's revenge.

It was mapped out so plainly in that aching heart of hers, which he had rendered desolate.

It would indeed be sweet to pierce his soul with bitter poisoned words, with barbed darts that should hold and sting and rankle, as for five years had rankled the remembrance of that happy time in which, not content with befooling her, he would fain have brought her to shame. Her revenge would be all the sweeter for the thought that she had used no womanly arts to expedite it, that he had come blindly to his doom, in spite of her coldness, her indifference, her contempt.

It was pleasant to her already, although she had occasional misgivings as to the completeness of her power over him. What would it be in the supreme moment?

Sometimes she faltered, not in her purpose, but in the determination that she would not lure him to his fate. This very day of the bazaar, as he stood before her, frank and fearless, a king amongst men, she burned with impatience for the hour when, bowed and helpless, he should lie at her mercy. At her mercy—ay, her mercy should be such as, in the old days, he had meted unto her!

"You will come to the concert to-night?" she asked.

It was not an invitation, but the coldest of conventional inquiries.

"Will you be there?"

"I sing," replied Miss Burgot. "By-the-bye, that reminds me that I shall need a litt respite. Dr. Preece, can you find a lady-substitute to take charge of my stall?"

"Let me escort you to the carriage," said Lord Armidale, offering his arm when the substitute had been found and thanked. And, with a flush of resentment, she accepted a courtesy she could not readily refuse.

Surpassingly beautiful she looked, as, with that flush still upon her cheek, she swept through the throng which drew aside to let them pass.

"A well mated pair," murmured Colonel Pettitt maliciously to Miss Clara Dallas, who tossed her head and turned away.

"I did not answer your question about the concert," said Lord Armidale.

I have forgotten it," replied Viola listlessly.

"I shall certainly be there. I would not lose the opportunity of hearing you sing for anything you could mention, Miss Burgot."

By way of reply she gave him a glance, calm, supercilious, and questioning, as though to ask what possible interest she could feel in such an announcement. Nevertheless the certainty that he would be there recurred to her during the homeward drive more often than she would have liked him to know.

She thought of it as she sipped a cup of tea and trilled a snatch or two from favorite songs, rejoicing that her glorious voice was at its very best to-day. She thought of it as she gave herself into the hands of her maid to be robed in a costume Worth had sent down the previous day.

She thought of it as she drove through the twilight to the school-room; and, when the carriage stopped, he with whom her thoughts had been busy appeared at the window, waiting that he might be privileged to hand her to a seat.

It was to him she sang presently, when her turn came, and she stood forward upon an improvised platform to warble in the ears of those stolid well-bred English folk a song of the sunny South. They admired and marvelled at her self-possession; but in truth she was hardly conscious of their presence.

Once she had chanted this Italian lay, so full of fire and passion, to a crowd of herds and muleteers, and they had crowded round to kiss the hem of her robe and crown her with flowers like a goddess. That had indeed been a triumph; but she cared not at all for the gentle applause of phlegmatic islanders. She saw but one face in the well-dressed mob, and she set herself to move it with pride and love and admiration. She had her reward.

Then she went back to her seat, ignoring the tumult and shouts of "Encore, encore."

Her name was on the programme for one more song, and that must suffice; she had no desire to cheapen herself for the sake of a little noisy adulation. All in good time her turn would come once more.

Once more she stood before them. It was an English ballad this time, simple and homely. After long deliberation, she had chosen it, thinking of him the while. Her eyes fell upon his face, eager, expectant, in keeping with the hush, the dead silence of the crowded room. Once more she sang to him alone.

What did he think of it all? Through one verse he watched her, decked out in her bravery of silk and flowers and lace and jewels, which made her marvellous beauty yet more fair. Through one verse he hung upon the wondrous melting tones of her superb voice; then he covered his face with his hand.

And she, magnificent actress that she was at that moment, with a heart as hard as the nether millstone, rejoiced to think that every note echoed in his soul.

The concert was over. He came to hand her to her carriage, with his grand features, so noble, yet so delicately cut, all flushed and moved as her song had left them, and his blue eyes shining with unutterable love.

"You will let me come to you to-morrow?" he whispered. And she leaned back in her corner pretending not to hear.

Mrs. Robert and "dear Clara" were with her, or she would have laughed aloud with glee. At last her revenge was mear at hand. To-morrow, by that hour, he would have knelt before her, and the iron should have entered into his soul.

"If you please, miss," said a footman, when they reached the Grange, "the Squire would be glad to see you for a few minutes in the library."

A thrill of shapeless apprehension troubled Viola Burgot as she crossed the threshold of theroom in which her father "would be glad to see her for a few minutes."

Illumined by firelight and lamplight, the library was yet in semi-darkness, for the lamp was turned low, and a shade concentrated the feeble radiance upon the table on which it stood. The long tiers of books had grim and ominous aspect, and the girl shuddered as she mentally called them a regiment of the dead.

As William Burgot came forward to hand her a chair, the gleam of the embers showed that he was pale and agitated. Then he went back to his own seat, and his features became indistinguishable. Silently, Viola nerved herself to hear something as yet indefinite, but terrible.

"I want you to tell me, Viola," said William Burgot—and his voice sounded solemn and strange—"whether you have ever received from me less than a father's kindness and a father's care?"

"Never!" answered the girl impulsively.

Then her thought reverted to that old Italian life, when she had been allowed to rove as freely as a wild bird and to busy or amuse herself as inclination might prompt. Little paternal care had been shown in those days; but the freedom had been in harmony with her surroundings, and accorded with her sense of a general fitness of things; moreover he had been kind always.

"Never!" she repeated, by way of confirmation.

"Then it will surprise and shock you to learn that I am not your father, nor am in any way related to you."

It was a cruel blow, but merciful in its directness. With a stunned feeling, Viola half rose from her chair and sat down again.

"Who—who are you?" she gasped.

"My name is Charles Singleton. Do you remember the ruined cottage to which I took you one day and my description of the gamekeeper and his wife who lived there when I was a boy? Those people were my father and mother."

"Go on—go on!" murmured Viola.

The man was rough enough, the woman was a refined and educated lady. What secret in her early life brought them together I do not know; but the ill assorted union was not for her a happy one. Her greatest consolation was the task of educating me and fitting me for a better position. I repaid her care and fulfilled her ambition by running away from home to enlist as a private soldier. I had been two years in the ranks when the regiment was joined by a young subaltern, in whom I recognised my old playmate and foster brother, William Burgot."

"My father?" said Viola interrogatively.

"Your father," he assented; and the girl gave a sigh of thankfulness.

It was something to be allowed to preserve her own identity as the kaleidoscope of deception was shaken.

"I was appointed his body servant; and, whilst we outwardly preserved the distinctions of rank, we kept up in private the affectionate intimacy of boyhood. He took me with him to Europe upon furlough; and when he married your mother and sold out, he bought my discharge. Within a year his wife died in giving you birth; within two years William Burgot died also."

"Why—why did you assume his name?"

"For your sake, and at his request. He was greatly troubled towards the last by the thought that no provision could possibly be made for your welfare. It was not likely that his stern brother Duke would receive the child of a mesalliance which caused the estrangement. William had no income beyond the pittance of one hundred a year allowed him by the late Squire that he might not starve. It was agreed between us, when the ravages of his disease could no longer be ignored, that we should remove from the village where your mother died to a more healthy part of Italy, that we should exchange names, and that, when he was gone, I should contrive to receive the allowance, and should in all things take his place. It was not until I learned that the false William Burgot was expected to take a quiet and undisputed possession of Burgot Grange and fifteen thousand a year that I awoke to the magnitude of the fraud."

"It was no great fraud," said Viola; "they belong to me."

The false William Burgot's hand went up to screen his darkened face.

"Not so, dear child," he said. "They belong to Mrs. Robert and her daughter. You are by English law illegitimate."

"Illegitimate!" cried Viola.

"The marriage was valid enough in Italy where your father proposed to end his days, but, when a Protestant Englishman marries a Roman Catholic foreigner, there are certain forms which must be complied with to legalize the marriage as an English one. From ignorance or carelessness, these forms were neglected. By English law you have no right to inherit your father's property or even to bear his name."

There was a long silence, deep and deadly, as though he had struck her to the heart. She did not gasp or moan or cry out; she bore the blow with stubborn fortitude, constraining herself to hold her peace until she could ask, in ordinary accents—

"Why keep this secret for twenty years, and tell it to me to-day?"

"Because I am very near detection. The Colonel Pettitt to whom you were talking knew William well as a beardless youth, and me as William's servant. He has forgotten me, but is astonished to find me so unlike his old chum. He is coming here to-morrow to stay for a few days, and I may possibly be able to hoodwink him through my intimate knowledge of his Indian experiences. To do so is the only chance to retain all that we have gained. Your woman's wit must advise and help me, Viola."

"I will not perpetuate a wrong," said the girl.

"There is no wrong. Duke Burgot intended the property to revert to William and to yourself, and your moral right to it is not affected by the illegality of your claim. However, I do not press for immediate decision; Col. Pettitt will not be here till twelve o'clock to-morrow. Think the matter over calmly in all its bearings; only keep this in mind, if you retain your present position but a few months longer, you may then exchange it for a yet prouder one. It is evident to me, Viola, that you may be Lady Armidale."

"I wish you good night," she answered abruptly; and with that she rose from her chair, gathered her robes about her, and swept from the room.

CHAPTER IX.

It was the morning after the bazaar. Mrs. Robert and "dear Clara" were discussing the events of the previous day, and the widow was growing excited.

"I tell you, Clara," she enforced, "you are letting Lord Armidale slip through your fingers, as you have done so many smaller fry. Until yesterday I confess I had hopes; but his pointed attentions to that haughty minx Viola dashed them all to the ground."

"I do not believe she would accept him."

"Ridiculous!" cried Mrs. Robert. "It is true she does not go purring about him with pretty airs and winning ways and soft speeches, as you or I would do; that is not her forte. Every woman to her style; and Viola's is to be grand and imperious and disdainful as an empress; the role suits her type of beauty."

"Beauty!" exclaimed "dear Clara" in angry protest.

"We cannot but admit that she is very lovely, my dear. Everybody says so—raves about it in fact; and what everybody says must be correct. But, as I was remarking, Viola does not go about purring about him—she affects superb indifference; but I have studied her closely, and I am convinced she intends to be lady Armidale. What girl in her senses would refuse such a match and such a man? The prize is lost to you, unless you can win it by some bold coup."

"Such as making him an offer and forcibly abducting him in the event of its refusal," said Clara, with bitter sarcasm.

"Dear Clara," retorted Mrs. Robert, in the most dulcet of murmurs, "since you think proper to turn the subject to ridicule, I will let it drop. At your age I had accepted the most eligible of my suitors, had married him, and was a widow. I have worn well, and will do so; but a year or two hence you will find eligible suitors by no means plentiful."

THE LIFE OF A NEWSBOY.

I'me stuck with all these papers. Won't you please buy one?" The speaker was a bright eyed boy whose age, judging from his size, might be guessed as not more than ten years. Still, even under the light of a street lamp, lines of a premature age could be seen upon his pinched features. His attire was that of the street Arab—pantaloons sustained by one suspender, a torn woolen shirt, and a brimless cap.

"What keeps you out so late?"

"I would have been abed hours ago only I lost a dollar and thirty-five cents, all that I had earned during the day, and I could not go home without some money, so I had to buy a new lot of papers and go on selling."

"I suppose you lost your money pitching pennies?"

"Not much," the gamin responded with traces of injured innocence in his tone. "You don't catch me gambling. I've stood and watched the boys pitching pennies, and I made up my mind that nobody but them what's got plenty of money ought to gamble. I could not afford to lose a cent, so you don't see me gambling. I don't want even to know how."

"How much money can you earn a day?"

"That depends on the luck. I generally manage to take about a dollar home with me every night. You see I've got a mother and four young brothers to look after. It takes all I can earn to keep them going. It was good times just after the President was shot. I made nearly two dollars one day."

"Does not your mother do anything to help support the family?"

"Not much. Sometimes I have to get up in the morning and get the breakfast for the kids before I go to work. They are a pile of trouble to me, and it takes all that we can make to keep them at school. After school hours they go out and sell papers. They can't make much, but every little helps. We manage to keep them at school, and they'll know how good that is when they get as old as I am. I had no chance to go to school."

"You know how to read and count, don't you?"

"Oh! I can read and write and count better than they can now, but I taught myself. What I learned was by hearing them going over their lessons. That is, I learned to read that way. As soon as I got a start the rest came easy."

"I think I saw you at Mr. Child's dinner on the Fourth of July. Did you enjoy it?"

"You bet I did. A boy stole my ticket before we got on the train and I came near getting left, but the gray-whiskered gentleman who bossed the excursion made it all right. Then I got a seat at the table along side the feller that stole my ticket and I gobbled his cake to get square with him. You bet I wasn't going to get left. We were having a first-rate time and had just got to the strawberry Ice cream when the news came that the President was dead and the afternoon papers were getting out extras. I just took one spoon full of Ice cream, made sure of my car ticket and got down town as quick as I could. It was business with me, and I scooped in a dollar and a half. It ain't often that you get such a chance to make money on the Fourth."

"What do you expect to do for a living when you get older?"

"If it wasn't for the brats I'd go into a printing office and work my way up there. They pay boys so little that I can't afford to do that until the youngesters are better able to look out for themselves. In a year or two I'll be able to fix that up."

A FOOL ONCE MORE.—For ten years my wife was confined to her bed with such a complication of ailments that no doctor could tell what was the matter or cure her, and I used up a small fortune in humbugstuff. Six months ago I saw a U. S. flag with Hop Bitters on it, and I thought I would be a fool once more. I tried it, but my folly proved to be wisdom. Two bottles cured her, she is now as well and strong as any man's wife, and it cost me only two dollars such folly pays."

A MODEL JUSTICE.

Justice O'Connor, of Antonito, Colerado, fell asleep in a railway car, and because a brakeman woke him up he caused the breakeman's arrest. Being in bad humor, his honor went into the hotel, covered the landlord with two revolvers, and abused him to his heart's content. The next evening the Justice rode through the town on horseback, armed with a repeating rifle and two revolvers, threatening all whom he saw. Late at night the Vigilance committee took possession of him in the bar room, and hanged his honor in an old slaughter house. It came out that he had been connected with a gang of robbers, the other members of which he promptly discharged as often as they were brought before him.

HAVE COURAGE.—You may suffer from scrofula or some foul humor, your liver may be conjested, your lungs diseased, your kidneys deranged, your joints distorted with rheumatism, you may be almost a walking skeleton, yet despair not. BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS has cured others—it may cure you.

THE FATE OF A SPY.

A Nihilist of St. Petersburg was found to be in connection with the police in respect to the doings of his brother Nithilists. So they invited him to a dinner one evening, and the next day his body was found in a cemetery, with his throat cut from ear to ear. His experience was worse than that of the Russin spy who was among the Nihilists in this city. His business was suspected, and they met in his room s for a convivial evening. He was drugged, and his prapers were searched, confirming their suspicion. When he awoke from his stupor he found a letter advising him to quit the city at once. He went. A few months later he was murdered in Europe, and it was conjectured that the Nihilists on whom he was spying there were his slayers.

THE GREAT TRIUMPH of the 19 century is the great medical climax BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS, cures all diseases of the blood, liver and kidneys, nervous and general debility, and is the purest and best tonic in the world.

THURINGIAN PEASANTS AT CHURCH.

The Sunday morning service is the best time for seeing the picturesque costumes of the peasants. Before the hours of service arrive, groups of men women, and children assemble in the church yard, the girls having for the most part no covering to their heads save such as is afforded by their own abundant hair tightly platted in coils round their heads. The elder women wear a most elaborate head dress, composed apparently of broad silk ribbons, so arranged as to stand up over the forehead in a sort of tiara, while down the back ends hang in four long broad streamers. All the women wear, even in the hottest weather, great cloaks of divers patterns and colors, very full all round the neck, somewhat after the manner of an Elizabethan ruff. As each woman wears from three to five or more thick skirts, and this cloak over all, the apparent dimensions of a Thuringian peasantess rival those of your ladies in the days of crinoline. The men have for the most part given up their old peasant costumes, and adopted the hideous garments of civilization, and apparently conscious of their want of picturesqueness slink into the back-ground. Presently the bell begins to ring, and women and girls stream into the ground-flour of the church. Men and boys are relegated to the three row of galleries which, one over another, line the walls of the church up to the very ceiling.

THE GREATEST POPULARITY OF DR. FOWLER'S EXTRACT OF WILD STRAWBERRY is where it has been longest known. Time cannot detract from its merits. It is the old reliable remedy for all bowel complaints incident to the summer season.

BELLS IN BELGIUM.

At the present time the countrymost celebrated for its large and varied collection of bells, in addition to its other interesting associations, is Belgium—a fact relized by comparatively few tourists when they commence to investigate its queer old towns. But if the object is once studied, the pleasure to be derived from a sojourn here is greatly enhanced. This land of bell founders, particularly those of the sixteenth and eighteenth centuries, when Van den Gheyns, Hemony and Dumery lived. Of those three Hemony attained the greatest eminence, constructing, amongst numerous other works, the Mechlin chimes and the greater number of Antwerp bells. The cathederal at Antwerph contains fifty-five bells, besides the carillon and five other bells of great antiquity: of these latter the two principal ones are the curfew, and the carolus, given by Charles V, which is only rung twice in the year, and requires sixteen men to pull it. This bell was exceedingly costly, being composed of silver, copper and gold, and is valued at the sum of $100,000; the action of the clapper has worn away the sides a good deal. Dumery was the founder of the Bruges carillon, which consists of forty bells and one large bourdon.

Looking over the Belgian plains from the belfry of Notre Dame at Antwerp (the spire of which is 403 feet from the foot of the tower), a magnificent panoramic view is obtained; no less than 126 steeples can be counted, including Mechlin Cathedral and St. Gudule at Brussels, and from these belfries carillon are wafted on the air, playing operatic and other melodies, marking the hours as they pass in musical manner. It is quite a mistake to suppose that bells rung every seven minutes is an interruption; their constant recurrence is found to give life and vivacity to these quaint old cities, besides penetrating into the country for miles round; and it is wonderful, after a residence here, how the familiar music is missed when no longer heard.

The geographical aspect of Belgium is well adapted for the transmission of carillons, as it has been found that the penetrating sound on bells is much increased by being rung in a plain or valley, especially a water valley. The belfrey at Tournay, which rocks when the waether stormyin a very ominous manner, contains forty bells. A light is always kept burning after dark in the highest gallery, and if a fire breaks out, the tocan is sounded by the watchman, who is there night and day. The construction of the tambour carillon which produces such charming music, is exactly similar in principle to a musical box. It consists of a barrel with a number of little spikes on it, each of which lifts a tongue, which pulls a wire, and raises a hammer that strikes the required note on a bell In the last century the clavecin, or key board, was used, and the carilloneurs used to preform on this. One of the most celebrated of these players was Van den Gheyns, who used to perform quite elaborate pieces of musi on the bells.

The reason that so many belfries have beenerected in Belgium is doubtless owing to the incessant civil wars that used to ravage the country. It was on this account that in fortifying towns like Ghent and Burges, the first thing to be done was to build the tower, and the second to put up the bells, in order to have the means of calling the people together whenever an out break occured. According to this arrangement, it frequently happened that the bells were the property of the town, whilst the tower belonged to the cathederal chapter. These belfries are extensively decorated with the names of the tourists visiting them, and at Strasburg the signatures of Goethe and Klopstock are shown with pride. It seems an extraordinary thing that in this, as well as in other cathedrals, there is no better mechanical appliance used for swing bells than the wheel, with a rope over it, which is precisely the plan employed by the Chinese more than a thousand years ago.

HONORED AND BLEST.—When a board of eminent physicians and chemists announced the discovery that by combining some well known valuable remedies, the most wonderful medicine was produced, which would cure such a wide range of diseases that most all other remedies could be dispensed with, many were skeptical; but proof of its merits by actual trial has dispelled all doubt, and to-day the discoverers of that great medicine, Hop Bitters, are honored and blessed by all as benefactors.—Democrat.

Hail-stones the size of hen's eggs fell at Deadwood the other day. It is strongly suspected that the only thing that prevented them from going as large as elephant's eggs is the fact that elephants don't lay them.

PRESIDENT GARFIELD Monday undoubtedly witnessed the most unsatisfactory stage of the President's illness since he was wounded. The official bulletins contain little or no information, and what little their was proved very unsatisfactory to the general public. The attending physicians are very reticent especially to the members of the press, consequently their was great difficulty in supplying the public with any information as to the exact condition of the patient. It is generally admitted that the situation is very grave, and that the chances are, as to his death or recovery, about even.

A BRUTAL murder was perpetrated in Ottawa last week by a crowd of roughs. It appears an old and inoffensive old man got married, and the "boys" thought they would celebrate the event by a charivari, and thereby obtain a little free whiskey.—The old gentleman not approving of the honor, refused the demand made for $2, and as a consequence the row increased, whereupon he went out to endeavor to disperse the crowd, when he was deliberately stoned to death.

Some 20 of the participants have been arrested and we trust that no leniency will be shown them. Can nothing be done to put a stop to this barbarous custom. It is not long since a young man, not far from Markdale, was shot in the face at a charivari, which resulted, we are informed, in the total loss of his sight.

As we were going to press we received the following information by Telegraph from our Flesherton correspondent. Mr. David White Sr., a farmer living a little below this village East of Toronto and Sydenham road, met with instantaneous death by falling off a load of grain which he was hauling into his barn, and dislocating his neck.

Mr. Thibaudeau, has purchased the present season (to date) 300 head of cattle for his stock farm. He has disposed of the most of them, and is still buying. The amount of money which has passed through his hands in connection with the above business this season, is over $8,000.00.

ACCIDENT.—While driving along the station road, Master Fred. Leich colided with another vehicle. He had Mr. R. Davis' little boy with him, and was forced to jump out and let the horse go. The buggy upset and the horse took it in tow until it was a total wreck. Cause—narrow cuts of long standing. They are so narrow that it is next to imposible for one team to pass another without coliding. The merchants and others should never let the Council rest until they repair that road. We hope to see a large number of the ratepayers wait on the Council at its next meeting, to see what action they intend taking in the matter.

Rumor has it that a jewelry peddlar visited this picturesque Village last week, and by some means got drugged and robbed of all his jewelry and cash, in all amounting to over one hundred dollars. How much truth there is in it I am unable to say. The matter seems to be kept very quiet.

The Fall wheat harvest is about finished, and Spring grain, owing to the past scorching week, has ripened rapidly and is being havested, and is going to be a good average crop.

DUNDALK.

On Thursday the union Picnic of the Canada Methodist, and the Presbyterian Sunday Schools, held their picnic in Mr. McConnels grove, and we were well pleased with the manner in which the programme was carried out; both old and young appeared to fully enjoy themselves. We counted eight swings on the ground. and all in full working order, and it was pleasing to see how the fair sex enjoyed the lofty swing. Such unity we have not enjoyed in Dundalk for years. There appeared to be no distinction of party, and this is just as it should be, and we trust it may continue.

Ample justice was done to the very rich dainties provided by the schools. We do not hesitate to say, that the ladies in connection with Dundalk can compete with any part of the county of Grey, for fine and fancy pastery, for such they always have on every occasion. Long may they live.

The Broad Guage will soon be in Dundalk, and then ! ! !

Good crops in the vicinity of Dundalk, gives promise to a good fall trade.

The Canada Methodist Church in Dundalk, is now being painted, which will add much to its appearance and comfort.

THE TORONTO GREY & BRUCE.—The work of reconstructing the Toronto Grey & Bruce railway is going forward steadily, though hindered somewhat by the difficulty of procuring laborers. About one half of the steel rails needed to relay the track have already been distributed along the line, and the remainder will be laid down in a few weeks. As soon after that as the new bridges are completed and the alterations are made in the grading and alignment the steel rails will be laid, which will probably be about the beginning of October. The new elevator in Toronto is nearly finished, and it is expected that work will soon commence on one at the Owen Sound terminus. None of the new issue of bonds have yet been placed on the market, and it is not probable that they will be until the legal troubles of the road have subsided. A few months ago the whole amount might have been disposed of on the London money market at 105, but the contentions that have since taken place, and the application for the appointment of a receiver have depreciated them by five to ten per cent. All persons interested in the prosperity of the road will desire to see the litigation ended. —World.

A farmer, near Kingston, was shot, it is supposed, by a neighbor, who has since left for parts unknown.

ADDRESS

To the Minister, at the Ordination and Induction of Mr. Chisholm in the Presbyterian Congregation of Osprey, at the Presbyterian Church, McIntyre's Corners, August 3rd, 1881.

DEAR BROTHER,—

In the words of Paul to Timothy, I would say to you "Take heed to thyself, and to thy teaching."

Thy first consideration is thyself; that thine own heart be right before God. When thine own heart is right before Him thy work will be acceptable unto Him, and thou shalt have pleasure in it. His service will be a delight to thee; otherwise it will be a burden, a heartless task. In the midst of the trials, difficulties, heart-breakings, which invariably accompany the service of the holy ministry, the faithful servant will find a resting-place in the bosom of his God; there lodge every burden. Go unto Him with thy temptation—temptation which may act as a thorn in thy flesh, and He will say unto thee as unto His servant of old, "my grace is sufficient for thee." Beware of the malice of Satan—beware of it, when it comes through the agency of unreasonable men. Take heed to thyself against the openly wicked, whose sins go before them to judgment, who are easily marked and distinguished as those who are serving sin, who made shipwreck of the faith such as Hymenaeus and Alexander, whom Paul delivered unto Satan, that they might be taught not to blaspheme. Take heed also to thyself against the sly hypocrite whose words are as oil in thy presence, but as the poison of asps behind thy back. Enter not into their secret; unto their assembly let not thine honor be united."

You will have many friends here. There are many warm hearts ready to greet you. Friendship is worth having, and by no means to be lightly esteemed. It is expected of you to be friendly to everybody. In this respect you are to follow your Master, the Lord Jesus Christ, who in His friendship sought the good of everybody—even the outcast. In this sense you are to be the friend of the sinner, and the profligate. Alas, for human weakness, some enter into friendship with great readiness. There are those who expect so much in return for their friendship, that to keep it is exceedingly difficult. Yea, there are some unless you enter with them into their own ways, whether their ways be right or wrong, you cannot hope to keep it. It may not be worth having at so dear a price. Let it go. Take heed to thyself.

There are others who are not very ready in forming friendship, who are more retired in their nature. The stream of their affections runs slowly and smoothly, but it runs deep. What it lacks in swiftness it gains a thousandfold in profoundness. The friendship of such people is worth seeking and worth keeping. In order that we may possess it we must win it. We can win it only by our real merit—our faithfulness in duty—our sincerity and honesty of purpose. In proportion as the friendship of these has been hard to gain, so will it be the more easily retained. They are not of the fickle kind of folk who turn with every wind. It may happen that many of those who seem cold towards you at the beginning of your ministry will, in the course of time, become your most faithful and devoted friends; while on the other hand, some who may be most gushing in the display of friendship, may also be first to turn their backs upon you. Let not these things trouble you, neither be surprised at them. It was so with Christ, and with many a good man before and after His sojourn among men. Take heed to thyself. Keep a conscience void of offence. Thus shalt thou have peace with thyself, and approbation with thy God.

Take heed to thyself and to thy teaching. You will have a good deal of teaching to do. Take heed that it is of the right quality. A stewardship or dispensation of the Gospel is committed unto you. God has been pleased to count you faithful and call you to this ministry. Thank Him for His mercy. Much of the teaching must needs be to put the people in remembrance of what they already know, knew long ago. God's people will never get weary of the Gospel. They hate profane and vain babbling, strivings about words, talking of knowledge falsely so called, which does not feed the soul. It is no bread to them. Give them the bread of life. Prepare it for them the best way you can. In the prepartion of your discourses there is ample room for the display of individuality. Be yourself by all means. Be not bound and cramped too much by the rules and laws laid down by men for building up sermons, but these have their use and are valuable. Be not a mere imitator, only imitate the Lord Jesus, our great example. Teach your people in your own way, but teach them from the word of God. Let the message be His and from Him, delivered by man to men, but as a man who knows whereof he affirms; knows it so well that it has become part of himself.

The end of all your labours should be that you and your people be brought to love God more and more. Where love is, the bond of union and peace will ever increase in strength.

The material prosperity of the congregation is not the principal thing to be aimed at. It is an object to be sure, but unless such prosperity is grounded upon sound basis it is valueless. The outward growth of the congregation is intimately connected with its spiritual growth, but the spritual is the chief. Bodily exercise profiteth little, but godliness is profitable in all things, having the promise of the life that now is and of that which is to come.

You may sometimes find it necessary to teach men how they ought to behave themselves in the house of God. You may have need to use your authority, and your tact, and experience, and skill of human nature, in exemplifying good behaviour and in enforcing it. You are to-day put into the position in which you will have to remind men of their duties—men who are maybe older, richer, greater, wiser than yourself. This is a trying position for a man of a humble mind—a dangerous position for a vain novice. You are no novice. You have known the scriptures from a child. You have spent many years studying men and things, during all of which time you have professed your faith and passed through many temptations unscathed. Take heed of the danger however, but remember the words of Paul to Timothy, "Let no man despise thy youth." Men do not despise a man in the faithful discharge of duty.

False doctrines will try to creep in here, and there, imported by men whom Paul compares to dogs, men who creep into families, get into their affections on the sly, and with a smooth oily tongue, and a silly giddy heart and head, and lead captive silly people of both sexes, who are very fond of learning new things and new interpretations; yes, ever learning, but never able to come to the knowledge of the truth. These false doctrines you may need to hammer to pieces and scatter so as to expose them, that they may vanish before the light of the truth—the glorious light of the sun of righteousness. "Fear not, lo I am with you always."

In conclusion, take heed to thyself and to thy teaching. Guard and feed the flock committed to thy charge. Be faithful, fearless, enduring trials, patient, persevering, committing the keeping of thy soul unto God in well doing as unto a faithful Creator, who having proved thee faithful, will place upon thy head the crown of life that fadeth not away.

NOTICE.—We wish it disinctly understood, that we do not hold ourselves reponsible for the opinions expressed by our correspondents.

FROM THE OULD SOD.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

DEAR SIR,—I fear you will class me as a very tardy correspondent, inasmuch as I have not written you before this. Well, to tell the truth, which is always the best, I have often thought of redeeming my promise by sending you short sketches of my wanderings; but have not until the present time been able to screw my courage up to the sticking point, and now that I have commenced to scribble, I scarcely know where to begin, or what to say to interest your numerous readers. Perhaps it would be just as well to begin at the beginning, although to me full of painful recollections of that terrible affliction, sea-sickness, gentle reader, which took possession of me from the time I placed my foot upon the deck of the steamer, and would not let go its hold no matter how strenuously I struggled against it. For nine days I was confined to my berth, and many a time wished myself back in Markdale or at the bottom of the ocean.

The first land we sighted was Ireland, to me as pleasing a sight as water to the thirsty traveller in the sandy desert, and after a few more hours of agony, Liverpool was reached. As usual, our luggage was searched, which operation cost me the loss of a book, and friend Doll a box of cigars; for even in free trade England, so called, they have custom houses, and officers, who collect revenues pretty carefully. After passing the customs, we were allowed to pass the luggage porters when they had collected a shilling for doing absolutely nothing, as I handled my luggage myself. One can scarcely turn round in this country, especially if a foreigner, without it costing him a shilling. A shilling for the waiters at the hotels; a shilling for a candle and a bit of soap; a shilling for the porter; another for the "Boots;" and still another for attendance; and if you show the least weakness, the cabby will ask an extra sixpence or a shilling "just to drink your honor's 'ealth with, as it is a 'orrible chilly day, you know."

Liverpool, the entry port for the shipping of the world, with its forests of masts, miles of magnificent docks at which floats hundreds of vessels, from the tiny pleasure yacht up to the full rigged East India merchantmen, ladened with the spices of the East, and the mighty Atlantic steamers, with their cargoes of meat, wheat, and cotton; its seven and nine storied warehouses; its massive cotton and corn exchanges, public buildings, handsome private residences, and parks, forms a picture of solid wealth especially pleasing to those engaged in commercial pursuits.

From Liverpool I boarded the great Northern fast Express train for Manchester, and was whirled along at the rate of 60 miles an hour. If the English are slow at somethings, they are certainly the fastest at collecting shillings and railway travelling. Every Yankee you meet here, and there are a good many here at the present time, have to acknowledge that railway travelling in this country is much superior in point of speed to America.

You can smell the smoke of Manchester for miles before you reach it. As Liverpool has its forests of masts, so Manchester has its forests of huge chimneys, towering high up in the air, and emitting great volumes of smoke completely shutting out the sun's light, and making it comparatively dark at mid-day. Manchester has a population of about 500,000, mostly engaged in the manufacture of cottons, felts, rubbers, &c. To me, coming from the bright, clear atmosphere of Canada, the smoke and smell was stifling and very oppressive. I made my purchases as quickly as possible and left for Birmingham, where Mr. Doll had gone to purchase some jewelry. From Manchester to Birmingham, and indeed right through to London, on both sides of the railway for miles inland, you will see one continuous line of large manufacturing establishments of all kinds, where iron, steel, cotton, woolen, silk, brass, gold, crockery, hardware, in fact everything man requires, except religion, from a 1000 pound cannon, to kill his fellow man with, down to a lady's hair pin is manufactured. I was just thinking while whirling past these great busy hives of industry, that we in Canada, in order to become a great and prosperous people, must imitate our grand old mother, who so carefully and patiently nursed and protected her manufactories in their infancy, until now they are strong and powerful, and enabled to weather the successive failure of crops here, and the keen competition from America and other protected countries, although the American, Canadian, and French protective tariff is a sore spot with them here. They would much rather we would send them our wheat, pork, cheese, beef, &c., and that they would do all our manufacturing for us.

From the manufacturing centres of England I proceeded to Stratford-on-Avon, the birth-place of the immortal Shakespeare, where I visited his tomb, sat in his chair, and thought of the many pleasant hours I have spent reading the life-pictures, which no doubt he penned while seated in the old chair which I was then sitting in. Thence by fast train from the little peaceful County Town, with all its hallowed memories, to the great bustling City of London, with its 5,000,000 human beings, the most populous city in the world. It cannot fail to impress the visitor no matter how careless or superficial an observer he may be. Nothing is better calculated to afford the traveller a good insight to London, and enable him to take his bearings, and to dispel the first oppressive feelings of solitude and insignificance which creeps over one, than a drive through the principal quarters outside an omnibus, where you get a much better view than by a cab, besides being much cheaper; and if you can manage to get a seat beside the driver, and he happens to be obliging, a shilling would make him so, he will give you more information about the streets, buildings, monuments and other sights, than you could possibly get in any other way.

London has doubled its size within the last half century, and now covers an area of 122 square miles; is lighted by 1,000,000 gas lamps; has 300,000 domestic servants, and there are more Scotchmen in London than in Edinburgh, more Irish than Dublin, and more Roman Catholics than in Rome. It consumes annually 10,000,000 bushels of wheat, 400,000 oxen, 1,500,000 sheep, 130,000 calves, 250,000 hogs, 8,000,000 head of poultry, 4,000,000 pounds of fish, 5,000,000 oysters, besides lobsters and other food; and the Londoners require to wash down all that amount of food, the modest amount of 180,000,000 quarts of ale and porter, 8,000,000 quarts of spirits, and 31,000,000 quarts of wine, not to speak of 150,000,000 gallons of water daily supplied by the various companies.

To me, London has been the most interesting city I have visited. I was, by the kindness of a friend, permitted to hear the Hon. E. Gladstone, Forster, Bright, Parnell, O'Donnell, and several others speak in the House of Commons. Hundreds of interesting and Historical places have been pointed out to me; such as the spot upon which the martyrs suffered for their faith; Guy Fawkes' cell and the gateway under which the two sons of Edward IV were murdered by their cruel uncle, Lady Jane Gray's, Sir Walter Raleigh's and many other noted persons' cells, and the inscriptions the unhappy inmates cut into the stone. I visited Wesley's chapel, and sat in the pulpit that John Wesley preached in, and plucked a flower from off the grave of Adam Clark; visited the tower, and inspected the jewels, &c. On Sabbath went to church, like a good Christian, three times, which is better than a great many Christians do; heard the Rev. Newman Hall, Spurgeon and Canon Farrer, three of London's greatest preachers.

After ten days spent in London I went to Paris, the gayest and wickedest city in the world, of which I will say a little in another letter, as I fear this will weary your readers.

From Paris I went to Edinburgh, where I met with more genuine hospitality than in any place I have been; thence to Glasgow, the dirtiest, and then on to Ould Ireland, where I am staying with an Irish family named McFarland, and am enjoying the rale ould Irish hospitality, with an occasional drop of the pothen by way of divarsion.

Will write yau again when the spirits moves.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

SIR,—I notice in last weeks issue a letter from Wm. Brown, blowing his horn in connection with a Presbyterian ordination on the 16th inst., said to be "according to the simple rites and ceremones of the early Christian and apostolic church" and that "all those who have a desire to understand and Appreciate the Scriptural form of ordination should attend." I have heard since that a teameeting or something of that sort is to be held on the evening of the ordination, at which a 25c charge is to be made. I suppose Mr. Brown also considers this to be part of the simple rites and ceremonies of Apostolic times, and that the 25c charge is the regular orthodox Apostolic and Scriptural method of church support. Oh! Oh!! Oh!!!

CONSISTENCY.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

SIR,—In your last week's issue I noticed a letter from Wm. Brown, in which a claim to true Apostolicity is made for the Presbyterian body. Now, if this means anything, it must mean that the Apostles and early Christians were Presbyterians. Supposing this to be so, how does Mr. B. account for the universal predominance of Church government by Bishops, Priests and Deacons during the first fifteen centuries of the Christian era? Unless it happened upon a certain night that all the people professing Christianity went to bed Presbyterians and got up next morning Episcopalians, and so complete was the change, and so thoroughly ignorant of it were they, that not a single historian was found to record the wonder. Would it not be rather odd, Mr. Editor, if Mr. B. should have such an experience? Be the day far off!

Every person who knows anything of Church history knows that the Presbyterian form of Church government was unknown to the world until the sixteenth century. If so, what becomes of Mr. B's claim to Apostolicity for Presbyterianism.

Mr. B. refers to Acts xiii-3 will he find out how many of those who took part in the ceremonies last Tuesday were truly Apostolic in regard to fasting as preparitory to take part in an ordination.

To be truly Apostolic it may be necessary to unite Apostolic ceremonies at ordinations but it is absolutely necessary to have Apostolic authority, which is possessed by no Protestant body except by the Catholic and Apostolic Church of England.

SIR,—The Flesherton paper has a name or at least gives itself a name. It calls itself the Advance. This enterprising sheet actually manages last week to give notice of the illness of the late manager of the Northern Railway, Mr. Cumberland about a week after his death and burial. Surely Advance is a misnomer, one of the many shams of this modern era.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

SIR,—I have been reading those letters by "M," on church affairs. In his last he asks for Subscriber's view on increasing church income. I waited a week to see what Subscriber would say, but there being no reply in last weeks "STANDARD," I will give "M" my view. Lay on a tax. Why not tax for this as well as for many other less important matters? O, but says "M." we must have voluntary free-will offerings. Of course we must, and if we tax ourselves voluntarily and of free will is it notallright? Our national and municipal taxation is self inflicted. We are a free people taxed by our representtatives in other words by ourselves. Consequently our taxes are voluntarly free-will offerings. Well if we elect office-bearers in a congregation and appoint them to get the town Clerk's assessment role and clap on a tax on each member to raise the necessary annual amount required would not that be a voluntary free-will offering? O, but some may say again The Gospel is free, without money and without price. Well, who says it isn't? But the Bible don't say that we are to get our Chapels free, our Parsonages free, our Pastors free. Not at all. The Gospel is to be distinguished from its adjuncts. Tax the adjuncts but leave the Gospel free. So thinks.

TAXARIOUS.

To the Editor of the STANDARD.

SIR,—I observe some discussion in your paper as the best way of supporting the church, It seems to be a difficult thing all round to get money enough for religious purposes. Whiskey gets the name of being a means of great evils. Is it not possible to make it a means of doing some good. I wouldsuggest that every time that any one spends ten cents in treating he should hand another ten to the bar keeper who might have a special till for church purposes, and thus the tavern keepers could act as general church treasurers. It appears to me that this would solve the financial question for the church. Some sticklers might find fault with the plan. But what scheme is there with which some fault could not be found. Some people say better throw your money away than spend it on whiskey, but this plan would secure for a good purpose as much as throw away. Others say that money spent on strong drinks is so much given to the evil one. Well, allowing that to be so, it would help to equalise matters if as much was given to Him who is the essence of all good. Again, some think it useful and necessary sometimes to fight the devil with his own weapons, now this would be better than that because it would show by clear contrast the benefits accruing from the respective ten cents and would also show that we had some sense of.

FAIR PLAY.

To the Editor of the STANDARD,

SIR,—In his last communication your correspondent "M," comes down hard upon debt, especially church debt. There are three kinds of debt that may be referred to, viz:—Individual, National and Ecclesiastical. In regard to the first, is it not a fact that the individual who is not in debt in some way or other is apt to get lazy, careless, indifferent, frequently loses his business energy, and does not attract that amount of interest from others which indebtness to them would doubtless create for him. Then National debt is by some wise acres in national domestic economy considered to be a national calamity, while it is strongly argued by others that a nation to be prosperous must have its debt. It acts as a spur to national energy, creates an international interest, and is humanly speaking a great incentive to everlasting peace. In a similar way debt ecclesiastical may have a energising influence in keeping churches in a state of vigourous activity, acting as a preventative of a careless indifferent laziness in church matters, and smooths the way to a state of harmonious brotherly action between the pulpit and the pew. On these premises therefore it may well be argued that the best way of increasing our church income, is to lose no time in getting into debt, keep piling it up, and not be in any very particular hurry in getting out of it. As to lessening church expenditure so as to keep out of debt being the other part of "M's." query. This would never do. It would be a going backward and if debt has any of the advantage referred to it would be superfluous. The point is, as we advance into debt find out means to follow it up so as not altogether lose sight of it. A great many ingenious ways have already been hit on for this purpose, such as Festivals, Soirees, Concerts, Garden Parties, Raffles, Bazaars, &c., and it must be allowed even by "M." that they have been effective if not conclusive. Debt has been scourged, docked and shortened by these methods, but it is still moving forward Could not "M." try his ingenuity in inventing some new and sensational way of still farther lessening the shadow of this ogre of the church, or could he not do something to improve the said Raffles and Festivals in accordance with principals. Does "M." want to drive all Sociality out of the church. Is the devil's disciples, only to have their social, gatherings and christs disciples alone to remain sour solem, and selfishly apart? If I want to give a Yorker to help build a church or pay a certain church debt, am I not giving voluntarily and square out of my pocket as "M." advocates when I give it by way of a Raffle or Social Spree in a garden or otherwise, even suppose I pay another Yorker for the fun of the thing. The open sore perhaps is in whether we give our quarters for God's glory or our own enjoyment. If these can be combined, why not? If they cannot, let "M." demonstrate the fact and if so demonstrated, by all means let the the thing be knocked on the head.

Yours Truly,

SIR,—The mountain has labored for two weeks and brought forth a mouse on the road repairs.

Which is the Blockhead?

The Advance of June 8th says:—"Two thousand dollars, or there abouts, would make the road to the station almost perfectly level. We hope prompt action will be taken in the matter, for assuredly $2,000 could not be better spent."

Advance July 28th:—One would think to read what certain corre pondents have been writing in reference to the County gravel roads in Artemesia Township, that they were totally unfit for travel in many places, when the very opposite is their condition, as any man outside of an asylum would acknowledge."

Surely if it would take two thousand dollars to repair 1½ miles of the road, they must be in a very bad condition, and in his last issue he states, that his devil says something ought to be done to the station road, and says he told the truth. This is only one more instance of a boy advising the Council, (Ensign Field should be proud of his son) Then he adds,—"We certainly think the Council should expend some money on that station road, and the sooner the better."—Why, Mr. Editor, the truthfulness of the old Devil himself would put the Advance to shame; but then the editorials are like Crusoe's scurulous style, and correspondents of any note would not contribute to such a sheet, The Eugenia critique may find to his surprise that Crusoe's scissors have been through his articles,

Ever and anon Friday of the Advance groans because you have a correspondent in Flesherton; but there is nothing wondeful in that, because the ablest correspondents in this locality does homage to deities of higher order than that of a Mud-Turtle. Ratepayer will hear from me next week.

Burglary.—On Sunday night the store of Richard Notter, Owen Sound was entered by burglars, and a small quantity of money taken. Owen Sound appears to be infested with a nest of burglars, as not a week passes without the papers recording one or more cases of the kind and no clue to the perpetrators. What are the Owen Sound police doing. We believe they have a chief of police and three or four constables, and yet burgelers are of almost daily occurrence, and yet the aforesaid police have been unable to find any clue.

Quite an exciting incident occurred at the residence of one of our villagers on Tuesday night. The head of the family was sitting quietly enjoying his evening smoke and conning over the colums of the Mail. His better half was at the other end of the table, like Queen Dido, darning a hole in a stocking, and the two boys were sitting at the back door laying out plans for the morrow, and searching for the comet. Suddenly the quiet serenity of the scene was disturbed by a fearful scream and in rushed the two boys with palid faces and protruding eye balls. With some difficulty they were quieted and asked what was the matter, oh, such a big black bear made a rush at us and growled. Out rushed the valiant father, seazing an axe as he went, followed by his wife with a heavy iron poker, and the boys bringing up the rear, holding high the lamp so pa and ma could have plenty of light. After searching all round the premises and finding nothing, they looked out on the road, and there spied Mac's big black Newfoundland dog trotting quietly away with a bone in his mouth. Thus ended what might have proved another very exciting bear story.

ORDINATION AND INDUCTION IN MARKDALE.

The services in connection with the Ordination and Induction of Rev A. Wilson to the Ministry of Flesherton and Markdale congregations of the Presbyterian Church, took place at the latter place, in Dufferin Hall, on Tuesday, the 16th inst., and was largely attended by members of the congregations and others.

An entertainment was given in the evening, tea being served from 6 to 8. The Tea was excellent (provided by McIntyre) and the pastry was truly rich. After tea, which was served in the first flat in the Hall, all repaired to the upper floor, and Mr. Meldrum was voted to the chair, which he filled in his usual off-hand business like manner. He first called on Mr. Snider, Presbyterian Student, who spoke for a short time on the Training of Children, which was no doubt considered a very appropriate subject for a young man. Mr. and Miss Anderson then gave one of their popular songs, which was appreciated very highly. Mr. Milne, of Maxwell, gave a reading in his usual masterly manner. Mr. and Mrs. McIntyre gave a favorite Scotch song, after which came Rev. Mr. Chisholm, who stirred the mirthfully element, and dwelt particularly on the necessity and benefits of liberality in the lives and actions of the people. Mr.——a song, Dr. Sproule M. P., spoke a few words in a masterly manner. Misses Rorke & Lazier Duette. Rev. McDairmid, (Methedist), afew words, especially congratulating egtf congregations on their very wise and judicious choice of a minister, in the person of Mr. Wilson. Mr. & Miss Anderson were again called on and gave anotherthrilling Scotch song, and were not permitted to take their seats again in the congregation, but were enchored and kindly obeyed the request to the satisfaction of all present. Rec. D. McLeod. Priceville, was then called to the platform, and gave a few remarks in his earnestand appropriate way. Miss Rorke & Lezier, were again called on, and rendered a piece of music which was very highly applauded. Rev. Mr. Wilson then gave a short address, after which one of the most pleasing and interesting events of the season came to an end. All, we believe, were well satisfied with their evenings enjoyment.

The Mail gives currency to the following incident, which exposes the essence of meanness:—The head master of a public school in a western county has been recieving $425 a year, or a trifle more than $8 a week. in return for his services as instructor of the neighborhood. Just before the holidays, an educational tramp offered to undertake the work for $400 per annum, or at the rate of fifty cents per week less than the master was recieving. Now, if the trustees had been mean men they would have accepted the offer at once. But as there is not a spark of meaness intheir composition, they determined to wait upon the schoolmaster and inform him of the lower offer they had recieved. They waited upon him accordingly and told him that he could either continue his position at reduced salary or give to a cheaper man. Next year the trustees will be wondering how it is the school master does not preform his duties so heartily and so cheerfully as formerly. But they will have the satisfaction of knowing they are keeping him humble. There is nothing like compelling the minister and the teacher to pratice humility.

Wheat Experiments.—Mr. Sealey, Reeve of Waterdown, has just threshed out seven acres of fall wheat of this year's groth. The patch realized 485 bushels—an average of 69 bushels an acre, proving a very good yield of excellent grain. It may interest farmers to know how the three descriptions of seed sown by Mr. Sealey turned out. There was sown on the 7 acres 10 bushels of hack wheat which produced 100 bushels; 10 of Fultz, producing 153 bushels; 14 of Clawson, realizing 230 bushels. How does the experience of other farmers correspond with this? The hack wheat was a trial, and at the rate of yield recorded cannot be regarded as satisfactory. Mr. Sealey says the oats in his district have never turned out better. He has several magnificent fields. As to the time for fall wheat sowing, his long experience has taught him that early seeding is by far the best. He always tries to sow betwee the 1st and 10th of September.—Hamilton Times.

Ayer's

Hair Vigor,

FOR RESTORING GRAY HAIR TO ITS NATURAL VITALITY AND COLOR.

It is a most agreeable dressing, which is at once harmless and effectual, for preserving the hair. It restores, with the gloss and freshness of youth, faded or gray, light, and red hair, to a rich brown, or deep black, as may be desired. By its use thin hair is thickened, and baldness often though not always cured. It checks falling of the hair immediately, and causes a new growth in all cases where the glands are not decayed; while to brashy, weak, or otherwise diseased hair, it imparts vitality and strength, and renders it pliable.

The Vigor cleanses the scalp, cures and prevents the formation of dandruff; and, by its cooling, stimulating, and soothing properties, it heals most if not all of the humors and diseases peculiar to the scalp, keeping it cool, clean, and soft, under which conditions diseases of the scalp and hair are impossible.

As a Dressing for Ladies' Hair

The Vigor is incomparable. It is colorless, contains neither oil nor dye, and will not soil white cambric. It imparts an agreeable and lasting perfume, and as an article for the toilet it is economical and unsurpassed in its excellence.

THE TEN
Insurance Commandments.

1. Thou shalt insure thy real and personal estate and all that thou hast against fire, for—

Defending thyself from misfortune until old age,
Thy happiness shall equal thy wisdom.

2. Thou shalt not insure more than thou dost possess, for insurance is a business wherein thou canst not make money. This is simply thy duty in order to preserve what thou hast acquired.

Preserve that which thou shalt acquire,
Whoso is prudent guardeth his goods.

3. Thou shalt not insure less than thou dost possess—for what thou dost not insure, will not be paid in case of loss.

Though poverty is not a vice
To lose all is not a pleasure.

4. Thou shalt not make excessive declarations of value respecting thy property in case of fire; but thou shall state truly that which belongs to thee, that thou mayest not have a lawsuit or gain a bad reputation

As we make our bed so must we lie.

5. Thou shalt also exhort thy neighbors, thy friends, and thy relations to insure themselves, that they may escape loss, and that poverty through a loss by fire be not laid to thy charge.

That which comes by the flute goes by the drum.

6. Thou shalt not backslide, nor hinder thy neighbor from making all these insurances, for those who are so improvident as not to insure are those who are most visited with losses; no one pities their condition.

Those that are beaten pay the fine.

7. Thou shalt not search for evasion to get rid of the expense of insurance, for it is low in proportion to thy position; thou canst put by as much as the value of the bottles of wine thou drinkest, and thou wilt then have sufficient for all thy insurance.

The pitcher that goes often to the well must in the end be filled.

8. Thou shalt regard the expense of insurance like the expense of thy meat and drink; and as thou canst not do without these, because thou hast hunger and thisrt thou shalt not more hesitate about insurance, because it will give thee security, repose, consolation, and aid.

In thirst and misfortune
A pear in reserve is a pleasure.

9. Thou shall be careful when thou insurest that thou selectest a reliable and safe company and that the agent is an honest one, because in so doing in case of a loss thy money shall not have been paid for nought, and if thou lose thy property and not get thy insurance thouwill be poorer than a church rat.

If thou fallest into poverty
People will care but little for thee.

10. Thou shalt do all thy insurance with Robert Davis, the Conveyancer and Land and Insurance Agent at Flesherton, for—

He represents only the best companies, and
He guards well his patrons' interests.

ROBT. DAVIS,

Conveyancer, Commissioner in B. R., Real Estate, Loan, and Estate Agent, Flesherton Branch office, Rutledge's Hotel, Markdale, every Thursday.

THE COOL CAPTAIN AND THE LISPING LIEUTENANT.

A good story has been told of a lisping officer having been victimized by a brother office (who was noted for his cool deliberation and strong nerves), and his getting square with him in the following manner.

The cool joker, the captain, was always quizzing the lisping officer, a lieutenant, for his nervousness, and said one day in the presence of his company. "Why, nervousness is all nonsence; I tell you, lieutenant, no brave man will be nervous."

"Well," inquired the lisping friend, "how would you do, thpose a thell with an inch futhee thould drop itthelf in a wall angle, in which you had taken theltor from a company of tharpthootherth, and where it wath thertain if you put out your nothe you'd get peppered ?"

"How ?" said the captain winking at the circle, "why take it cool, and spit on the fusee."

The party broke up, and all retired except the patrol. The next morning a number of soldiers were assembled on the parade, and talking in clusters, when along came the lisping lieutenant. Lazily opening his eyes, he remarked, "I want to try an expirement thith morning and thee how extheedingly cool you can be."

Saying this, he walked deliberately into the captain's quarters, where a fire was burning on the hearth, and placed in its hottest centre a power caister, and instantly retired. There was but one mode of egress from the quarters, and that was upon the parade ground, the road being built up for defense; the occupant took one look at the canister to comprehend his situation, and in a moment dashed at the door, but it was fastened on the outside.

"Charlie let me out if you love me," shouted the captain.

"Thpit on the canither ?" shouted he in return.

Not a moment was to be lost; he had at first snatched up a blanket to cover his egress, but now, dropping it, he raised the window, and out he bounded, sans everything but a very short under garment, and thus, with hair on end, he dashed upon a full parade ground. The shouts which hailed him brought out the whole barracks to see what was the matter, and the dignified captain pulled a sergeant in front of him to hide himself.

Why didn't you thpit on it ?" inquired the lieutenant.

"Because there was no sharp shooters in front to stop a retreat," answered the captain.

"All I've got to thay, then, ith," said the lieutenant, "that you might have thafely have done it; for I thwere there wathn't a single grain of powder in it." The captain has never spoken of nervousness since.

TRY BURDOCK BLOOD BITTERS, the great system renovator, blood and liver syrup, acts on the bowels, liver and kidneys, and is a superb tonic.

A BLUFF GAME.

A SOMEWHAT QUESTIONABLE STORY OF TURNING THE CHEEK OF A LIFE INSURANCE AGENT.

He was an old man and said he'd seen better times. I hoped he had, but I was tremendously busy and didn't want any life insurance, if he would excuse me.

"Oh, well," said he, "all right, young man, I'll drop in again."

The next day he did drop in, and sitting down on my desk, began: "Nothing in this world, my friend, will pay so big a percent. on a little money invested as a policy in the Mutual Benefit Association, the most, and in fact, the only sound company on earth, capital over seven million, and so prompt—why I insured a man last week for $10,000, and the same day he was run over by a street car, so when I sent in the policy and premium, I just said by way of a P. S: "Run over by a hoss car not an hour after insured; better send on check as he can't live; both legs cut off." The very next day I got a check payable to his heirs $10,500. Dividend, my friend, was more than the premium, and don't you call this prompt? That man's widow got this check before he had been dead fifteen minutes."

"But," said I, "I have no wife and don't want any life insurance, I tell you."

"The investment, my young friend—the investment. Look at the dividend. This may get $560 in one hour, you might say; and then you might have a wife some day. Now, you want a policy in this company, I know you do. I am an old man; have a large and varied experience, and I know you are just aching for one of these policies, only you are so extremely modest. Now, I'll just make out your application; it only costs you—let me see. How old are you ?"

"Twenty-six, but"

"Twenty-six—hum. Father living ?"

"No."

"How old was he when he died ?"

"Twenty-seven years old."

"Twenty-seven, hey? what did he die of? Accident, I presume."

"No, sir; consumption."

"Consumption? You don't look consumptive."

"But I am consumptive, and—"

"Mother's living I doubt not ?"

"No, sir; she died at twenty-eight."

"What was the cause of her death?"

"Insanity, sir, hereditary insanity; family's full of it. All my brothers, thirteen of us in all, sir, died between twenty-four and twenty-eight of the same disease. Dangerous, too, some of them; my oldest brother was taken about this time one day and he killed his partner, a book keeper, three clerks and fourteen customers before they could secure him, and—"

"You don't tell me so. This is wonderful. You look like a strong, healthy man, likely to live fifty years. Were you ever sick ?"

"Oh, yes, sir; I've had inflammatory rheumatism, phneumonia, dysentery, smallpox, mumps, liver complaints, fits, corns, and—"

"Good heavens? And you want me to insure your life. Well, my company is a good company, willing to take an ordinary business risk, but I must say I never knew them to insure a corpse. I'd like to accommodate you, young man; you seem anxious about it, and I feel interested in your family, but our surgeon wouldn't pass such an application. Good day.'

IT NEVER FAILS.—Dr. Fowler's Extract of Wild Strawberry is an unfailing remedy for all kinds of bowel complaint.

"THEM DOCTORS."

I had just unfolded the daily and settled back in my seat for a pull at the news, when she reached over, poked me in the neck with her yellow parasol and called out:

"Has them tarnal doctors killed the President yet ?"

She was an old-fashioned, motherly woman, never travelling without a phial of peppermint and having a hawk's eye for every patch of smartweed and bunch of catnit along the line.

"The President is able to sit up."

"I don't believe it—don't believe one end of no such story !" she said as she left her bundles and boxes and parcels, and came over to share my seat.

"But the papers say so."

"I don't keer two cents for the papers! I tell you the President hasn't been doctored right any of the time, and no body kin make me believe that he's gettin' better. Young man, are you a doctor ?"

"No ma'am."

"You needn't 'mam' me, because I'm a plain woman. It's a pity you ain't a doctor, for I could prove ye a humbug in about two minits Do you know what is killing off so many in this country ?"

"It's death, isn't it ?"

"Of course its death—death and the doctors! And them doctors have done their very best to kill the President! Do you remember what they done the day that he was shot ?"

"Um. Let's see? Probed for the ball and gave him morphine, didn't they ?"

"They did," she replied, as she jammed the parasol into my ribs. "That's just what killed my nephew in the army. He was shot by a cannon ball, and them doctors probed and probed and probed, and when they had got around to decide that the ball had gone clean through him and knocked off the roof of a barn half a mile away, the poor boy was dead, Morfeen! I have saved over a hundred nayburs from the grave and I never even sot eyes on morfeen! how much I have pitied the poor President, and how I have wished I was there ?"

"What for ?"

"What fur? Why, to turn them tarnal doctors out doors, and have the President out choping wood in four weeks! It makes me biling mad to read their way of treatin him."

"What would you have done ?"

"Don't ask me—don't ask me! I feel like spanking the hull crowd! have you read the papers every day ?"

"Yes."

"Well, have you read that they have soaked his feet one single time since the day he was shot ?"

"No."

"Of course you haven't! Did they put horseradish drafts on his feet ?"

"Not once."

"Have they gin him a smartweed sweat ?"

"No."

"Or tried mustard poultices ?"

"No."

"Has he had one single drink of catnip tea since the day he was shot ?"

"No."

"Have they used any flax seed aout him ?"

"No."

"Haven't heard of their digging any ginesen, sarsaparilla, wild turnip, sweet flag, burdock or sweet sicily ?"

"No."

"No you haven't!" she exclaimed as she just missed my nose with that amiable parasol. "All they've done is to talk about his perspiration being up to 102 his normal pulse and his temperature from 90 to 98. If it was me my temperture would be up to 300 and I'd make thingsp hum. It's the shamefacedest case I ever heard of, and you jist mark what I tell you—that them tarnal doctors will sniff at lobelia and number six and turn up their noses at mustard plasters till all of a sudden the President will begin to sink and sink, and even cold sage tea and mutton tallow won't save him."—M. R. J. SPROULE'S

GREAT ANNUAL

CLEARIG SALE,

AT THE

POST OFFICE STORE,

FLESHERTON.

In order to make room for heavy Spring Importations now arriving daily, I have decided reducing my present large and well selected and assorted stock of

GENAERAL DRY GOODS, FURS, MILLIERY,

Ready-Made Clothing,

BOOTS AND SHOES,

Hats, Caps and Groceries

TO THE LOWEST POINT POSSIBLE,

and in order to do so,

Will Sell at and Under COST,

FOR THE NEXT THIRTY DAYS.

The stock is all new, well bought, and well worth the attention of the closet buyers. In GROCERIES you will find evrything of First-Class Value.

As I do not pursue the course of some of our windy Merchants of our neighboring Villages, of sending out numerous samples of cheap trash (with unscrupolous recommendations) outside our natural business relations, in order to impress the public that they are not properly treated by their more honorable dealers, and draw custom from the many.

You will find everything that I sell just as I represent it, and as good value as you can possibly get for your money anywhere, as I have always held that honorable dealing is the only true course for a business man.

My Groceries are all bought for strictly nett cash, consequently I can and will sell at

The Lowest Possible Prices!

For CASH and FARM PRODUCE

BUT NOT FOR CREDIT.

I have also in stock and for sale, a large quantity of

PURE SEED GRAIN!

Such as White Russian, Glasgow, Red Chaff, and other varieties of Spring wheat. Also Pure Clean Peas, Oats and Barley. Prime Timothy and Clover Seed; also Fresh Garden Seeds, and as it pays each and every Farmer to sow clean seed, you will make money by paying a few cents extra, and purchasing a good article.

I am now selling large quanties of

COARSE LAND SALT,

FOR MANURE,

Which will pay every Farmer Five Dollers for every one invested in it, and as I am anxious that every Farmer in this locality and neighboring Townships shall try it, have decided in selling in five and ten barrel lots at the Lowest Cash Price laid down by the car direct from the Manufacturers, and bought for nett cash at Bottom Prices.

I would also intimate that my

SPRING IMPORTATIONS

ARE ARRIVING DAILY,

And I will have opened out and show

On The 1st of April,

One of the Largest and Best Assorted Stocks ever brought into this part of the country.

Thanking one and all for liberal patronage in the past, and soliciting an inspection before purchasing elsewhere,

I am, your obedient servant,
